Form of Bequest

I give and bequeath to The Century Association, of the City of New York, a New York corporation, the sum of $_____.

HISTORICAL

The Century was founded and its first Constitution adopted on January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association. Forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders; forty-six others joined during the year. The name, suggested by the number originally invited to be members, was the proposal of Edgar S. Van Winkle.

On March 7, 1857, the Association was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended on March 29, 1883.

During its early years, The Century occupied rooms at 495 Broadway from the spring of 1847 to the spring of 1849, at 435 Broome Street to the spring of 1850, and at 575 Broadway until May, 1852.

By this time, it required a house and moved to 24 Clinton Place (now 46 East Eighth Street). This was its home until the spring of 1857, when it made another move, to a house at 109 (old number 42) East Fifteenth Street. On January 10, 1891, it occupied its present Clubhouse at 7 West 43rd Street.

Successive amendments to the Constitution fixed the limit of resident membership as follows: March 5, 1853, 200 members; March 7, 1857, 250; May 7, 1859, 350; February 1, 1862, 400; April 7, 1866, 500; February 6, 1875, 600; December 5, 1885, 700; May 3, 1890, 800; February 6, 1892, 1000. The limit of non-resident membership has been fixed as follows: February 6, 1892, 300; December 3, 1921, 400; January 14, 1928, 500; June 3, 1941, 600; March 1, 1945, 700; April 3, 1958, 800.

The lamp that burns at each meeting of The Century was designed in 1858 for The Column, a literary society founded in 1825. It was lighted at all subsequent meetings of The Column until Centurions John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, the only surviving members of that organization, presented it to The Century in 1901 as "a silver symbol intended to be a lasting memorial to The Column." They also presented to "all present and future members" of The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The minutes of their meeting concluded, "The Column then adjourned sine die." Today, more than one hundred years later, the lamp still burns.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

THE Board of Management submits the following report for the year 1964:

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON ART

Committee on Exhibitions

The program arranged by the Committee on Exhibitions brought the following to the Gallery during the year:

January 31–March 28: Sculpture and Paintings by Xavier Gonzalez

April 1–May 30: Nudes in Any Medium by Artist Members (During June and the first part of July, the Gallery was closed for renovations)

July 15–September 25: New York Celebrates: Photographs and Prints Loaned by The Museum of The City of New York

September 30–October 30: Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members

November 11–January 10: Autumn Exhibition of Sculpture and Oil Paintings by Artist Members

In the Autumn Exhibition of Work by Amateur Artist Members, John Koch and Adolf Dehn served as the jury of award. As a result of their deliberations, prizes of silver ash trays were presented to Hugh De Haven, Erdman Harris, Andrew H. Hepburn, Samuel E. Homsey, R. McAllister Lloyd, Albert C. Santy, and Harvey Stevenson. Receiving Honorable Mention in this exhibition were: Lewis G. Adams, Winthrop W. Aldrich, Adriaan J. Barnouw, Joseph Verner Reed, and Eldredge Snyder. Albert C. Santy received the popular vote for the work liked best. He was again presented with a silver ash tray for his oil painting Hallelujah.

In the Autumn Exhibition of Sculpture and Oil Paintings by Artist Members, a jury comprised of James Thomas Flexner, Chairman, Donald Oenslager, and Hudson Dean Walker made the following awards:

In Sculpture:

The Art Committee Medal to Sidney Simon for his wood sculpture Oedipus As a Young Man. Honorable Mention to Lewis Iselin for his bronze head Sally.

In Portraits:

The Art Committee Medal to William Franklin Draper for his Portrait of President John F. Kennedy. Honorable Mention to the late Randall Davey (Centurion 1959-1964) for his Michel in Red Sweater.

In Oil Paintings:

The Art Committee Medal to Henrik M. Mayer for his Galatea III. Honorable Mention to: Ogden M. Pleissner for his Le Droquerie, Honfluer; Adolf Dehn for his Winter Park; Xavier Gonzalez for his Black and Oil.

The winner of the popular vote, who also received the Art Committee Medal, was Adolf Dehn for his painting Winter Park.

House-Art Committee

As new chairman I would like first to thank my predecessor, Sheldon Keck, for having left the affairs of the Committee in such good shape that I have had only to take up where he has left off, and second, to thank my Committee and our excellent staff, whose cooperation and interest has made my job such a pleasant one.

During the summer our storage room was fully equipped for the first time with adequate racks to store the many pictures in The Century's collection for which there is no permanent wall space. These pictures may be quickly identified from the index by the door.

The following pictures were on loan during the year:

The Power of Music at Bowdoin College's exhibition, "The Negro in American Art"

Lake Sanford at the New York World's Fair exhibition, "Art in New York State"

Three portraits by the late Centurion John C. Johansen: Mr. Paul Kieffer, President Emeritus of The Century; President Hoover; Mr. William Daniel; at the National Arts Club's memorial exhibition for Mr. Johansen.

Two paintings were cleaned: Saturday Night at the Century and The Parthenon by Sanford Robinson Gifford.

The Club received the gift of a delightful painting by Marsden Hartley, Rope and Shells. It was given anonymously in memory of the late Wilder Hobson.

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

SOME years ago, in the realization that The Century is not a suitable repository for significant and valuable manuscripts, our collections of this character were placed on loan with the

New York Public Library, where they would be more secure and more readily accessible to scholars. Among them were some thirty-five letters from Lafcadio Hearn to Centurion Ellwood Hendrick, the gifts of James Pomeroy Hendrick and Neill Phillips. These have been sold to the Berg Collection of the Library, where the larger part of the Hearn-Hendrick letters were originally deposited.

Edward Steese, the Archivist, reports that the varied materials relating to the history of the Association have been sorted and stored in either the vault or the new cabinets installed in the Committee Room. It remains now to index these for more ready reference; and it is hoped that this considerable undertaking will be accomplished during the year. Mr. Steese particularly commends the Assistant Librarian, Mr. Zaremba, who was assigned to this work. A number of exhibitions were assembled in the glass cases at the entrance to the Art Gallery, one of them presenting materials from the Archives.

Total accession of books during the year came to 716 in contrast to 653 for the previous year. Of these, 602 were purchased and 114 were from donors. Books with Century connections numbered 119. The Association subscribed to 74 periodicals, aside from newspapers, and received 23 gift subscriptions. Book circulation came to 214, while the librarians rendered 938 reference and research services to members. These statistics indicate a gratifying increase in the use of the Library's facilities, and in the interest of members.

It is again impracticable to list the many donors, but the Committee wishes to express its appreciation of their generosity.

Walter Millis, Chairman

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE

THE announcement by our manager, Pierre Marchand, that he wished to retire the end of May, 1965, after seventeen years of service, exploded on the House Committee. Mr. Marchand has been so much a part of The Century that it was taken for granted he would always be there taking care of our every need and desire. To say we will miss him is putting it tritely. It is a question how we will endure without his meticulous attention to detail and his gastronomic know-how. We can never thank him enough for the long painstaking hours he has put in serving us.

The Gallery was painted during the summer and its lighting system changed. The old glass skylights at the ceiling level were replaced with Plexiglas, the upper part reglazed with wire glass. New adjustable spotlights for flooding the pictures on the wall were installed on tracks mounted on the ceiling, giving complete flexibility for almost any effect desired. In addition they can be dimmed to any extent required. During the summer months the cleaned up skylights gave so much light that electricity was seldom turned on. Our engineer, Henry LaPlante, was of inestimable help in the conversion process and saved the Association considerable expense. We owe him our thanks for this and all the other smaller items he took care of during the year.

Other items to record, in order to help future historians identify their birth, were the installation of a portable TV in the repainted Committee Room and a new telephone switchboard to replace the one installed in antiquity. Another antique replaced was the sink and serving counter in the fourth floor pantry. Our food, as palatable as ever, will be served from spic-and-span surroundings.

On behalf of the House Committee, I want to thank the Chef, A. V. Vacher, his assistants, and all the staff for their loyal and efficient service. We owe much to these men.

The monthly dinners were held as usual and were well attended. The following speakers entertained and informed us during the year: John Gunther in January, on the subject "Reflections on Western Europe," followed in February by Francis P. Plimpton, who, with genuflections to John Gunther, spoke on "Inside the U.N." In March, Quincy Howe took up the question of the "Counter Revolution in Communications, followed in April by Herbert Feis on "The Prankishness of History," and in May, by Gerard Piel on "The Acceleration of History." In June, as is customary, there was no speaker and groups in informal dress gathered in the various rooms and tried in vain to outmatch the titles and substance of the previous talks.

For the first time, acting on the mandate of the Board of Management, the New Members Dinner, normally held in October, was put off until later in order to allow the large group of new members ordinarily elected in the fall, to be welcomed then rather than wait a year. So in October John Fischer gave us information on "How To Go Slightly Native in the Far East," and in November Henry Moe and his artists produced the "Wine and the Bard" festival, with the modern Bard himself explaining and commenting on the marvelous pictures on the walls.

In December came the New Members Dinner. Walker Cain, who became an immortal Centurion last year with his handling of this entertainment, produced, with the help of Russell Lynes and George Mead, another smash hit. Belly laughs and guffaws greeted classic picture after classic picture thrown on the screen with brief appropriate comments, interspersed with charts of The Century's organization and plans of the dining rooms. Never again should a new member be afraid to enter our building nor hold the premises and older members in awe.

Lewis G. Adams, Chairman

FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MUSIC

On Saturday, February 29, 1964, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York performed Beethoven's Trio in D major, Op. 70, No. 1 and Ravel's Trio in A minor. The trio includes Menahem Pressler, pianist, Daniel Guilet, violinist, and Bernard Greenhouse, cellist.

On Saturday, April 4, 1964, the Study Group in the Music of South India of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut—a company of ten young men and women under the direction of Robert E. Brown—presented a program of unusual interest and quality demonstrating the characteristic melodic designs and rhythms of South Indian musical art. Mr. T. Ranganathan played the Mridangam with charm and virtuosity.

On Saturday, December 19, 1964, a group of forty singers from the Dessoff Choirs under the direction of Paul Boepple gave a program of which the first part contained music with special reference to Christmas by Schein, Handl, Josquin, Mouton, and Schütz. The latter part was made up of three choruses by Brahms and two movements from the Missa Brevis of Buxtehude.

A large audience was present to enjoy the music and the festivities which followed, notably Mr. Marchand's traditional eggnog.

OTHER MATTERS

Amendment to the Constitution. At the Monthly Meeting on April 1, 1965, the Association, acting on the recommendation of the Board of Management, adopted an amendment to Section 3 of Article VI of the Constitution, concerning Absent Membership. (The section as amended appears in this Year-Book.) The purpose of the amendment is to clarify the provisions with respect to eligibility for this class of membership, limiting it, under liberal interpretation by the Board, to those Centurions who may be temporarily absent from the United States on a governmental, academic, or related assignment or leave for a continuous period of not less than twelve months.

Century Medal Awarded to Paul Kieffer. At the Annual Meeting of the Association on January 9, 1964, Vice-President Gilmore D. Clarke, acting on behalf of the Board of Management, presented the Century Medal to Paul Kieffer, then retiring as President after ten years of service. The Citation read:

"RESOLVED, that the Century Medal be awarded to
PAUL KIEFFER
PRESIDENT, MCMLIV-MCMLXIII

in recognition of his distinguished leadership of the Association during a decade when The Century flourished abundantly. Ever gracious, wise in counsel, with ready wit and anecdote enriched by an amazing store of knowledge and a boundless memory, he is the image of the ideal Centurion. This medal is presented as a dedicated token to mark his devoted service and to record in bronze the heartfelt and grateful affection of his fellow Centurions.

Ave Centuria Immortalis"

Reception by the Cosmopolitan Club. On April 27, the Cosmopolitan Club of New York gave a reception in their attractive clubhouse on East Sixty-sixth Street, for the members of The Century. It was a Leap Year Party for "members only." Several hundred Centurions and their gracious hostesses were present.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

HOUSE RULES

REQUIREMENTS OF
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

PASSED MARCH 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "The Century Association," to be located in the city of New-York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of art and literature by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

§ 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a constitution and by-laws, rules and regulations, for the admission, suspension and expulsion of its members, and their government, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe keeping and protection of its property and funds, and from time to time to alter or repeal such constitution, by-laws, rules and regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this act shall constitute the trustees and managers until others are elected in their places.

§ 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real and personal estate; provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

§ 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

§ 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this act.

§ 6. This act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the general Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I

THIS Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II

§ 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

§ 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The First Vice-President, or in his absence the Second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

§ 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Managment; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

§ 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem, to serve during such absence or disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

§ 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III

Of the Powers of the Association at Its General Meetings

§ 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

§ 2. No sale, lease, or mortgage of any of the real property of the Association shall be made unless the Board of Management shall authorize such transaction and report its action thereon to the members of the Association and unless, subsequent to the making of such report, such transaction shall be authorized by the concurring vote of at least two-thirds of the members present at a meeting of the members at which at least sixty members are present. [Amended April 3, 1958.]

ARTICLE IV

Of the Board of Management

§ 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

§ 2. The Board of Management shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from October to May inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

§ 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V

Of Committees and Their Duties

§ 1. Committee on Admissions. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for re-election within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

§ 2. Other Committees. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI

Of the Members

§ 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand. [Amended February 6, 1892.]

§ 2. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding eight hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from New York City Hall, and having no office or place of business in New York City. They shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office.

A resident member with the qualifications for non-resident membership may become a non-resident member upon application in writing to the Treasurer. Such member shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 3. Any member domiciled in the United States who is to be temporarily absent from the United States on a governmental, academic or related assignment or leave, for a continuous period of not less than twelve (12) months, may be exempted from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer prior notice of his intended absence and of his desire to be exempted. Except as to those who became Absent Members prior to January 1, 1965, such exemptions shall, however, apply only to the first two (2) years of continuous absence, after which time he shall be transferred to (or resume) non-resident membership and shall pay the annual dues fixed for non-resident members.

The privilege of Absent Membership shall not be extended to a member who intends to transfer or reassume his permanent domicile outside the United States. Upon taking up or reassuming such domicile, any such member shall be transferred to (or continued in) the non-resident class and shall pay the annual dues fixed for that class.

Absent Members shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of members. [Amended April 1, 1965.]

All members of the Armed Forces of the United States, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during their active service. [Amended March 1, 1945.]

An artist member who has paid an entrance fee as a resident member may at his option elect to be classified as a non-resident member and be liable for annual dues as such but shall remain entitled to all the privileges of the Association, including the right of holding office. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

§ 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative. If negative votes be cast against any candidate to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast, his candidacy shall be referred back to the Committee on Admissions for further consideration. If the candidacy of such person again comes before the Association, negative votes cast against such person to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude him from membership. [Amended January 8, 1953.]

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

§ 5. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

§ 6. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member.

Such payment shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of his election; or if within thirty days after such notice the member gives written notice to the Treasurer of his desire to do so, such payment may be made in four instalments, each of one quarter of the amount of the entrance fee; the first instalment shall be payable within thirty days after notice of his election, the second instalment within six months after such notice, the third instalment within twelve months after such notice, and the fourth instalment within eighteen months after such notice.

In default of such payment of the entrance fee, or the first instalment thereof, within thirty days after such notice, the member shall be deemed to have declined his election unless the Board of Management determines otherwise.

If any member fails to pay a subsequent instalment of his entrance fee when due, he shall be notified thereof in writing, and unless such instalment shall be paid within one month after such notice he shall thereupon cease to be a member unless the Board of Management determines otherwise. [Amended January 14, 1939.]

§ 7. The annual dues of resident members shall be one hundred eighty dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non-resident members shall be ninety dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter. [Amended April 4, 1963.]

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member of the non-resident class other than an artist member shall come to reside within the radius above named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and unless he has already paid the entrance fee of a resident member, he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fees necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member. [Amended March 6, 1947.]

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

§ 8. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by an affirmative vote by ballot of not less than nine-tenths of the votes cast. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office. [Amended, April 5, 1956.]

§ 9. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

§ 10. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII

Of Meetings

§ 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Thursday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P.M.

§ 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Thursday of October, November, December, February, March, April, May, and June at 9 o'clock P.M. [Amended April 2, 1964.]

§ 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

§ 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII

Of Amendments

§ 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

§ 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

§ 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

§ 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

§ 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

§ 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

§ 4. Guests and Visitors:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the general rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee, and is also subject to the following limitations: prior to three o'clock in the afternoon, a member may introduce only one guest a day, and may not introduce the same person more than twice in the calendar year; after three o'clock, a member may introduce up to three guests a day, and may introduce the same person as often as once a month. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management. A member may not obtain from the House Committee—nor may the Committee grant—such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same person more than once in a period of twelve months. Guest privileges extended by the House Committee or on its recommendation may be terminated at the discretion of the Committee at any time. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(e) Only guests to whom the privileges of the Association are extended under Section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution or under paragraph (j) of this By-Law may introduce visitors to the Clubhouse. No guest or visitor may be present at any business meeting of the Association. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

(f) A member who obtains admission to the club-house for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

(j) In addition to the powers herein above granted, the Board of Managment may provide for the invitation of authors, artists, and composers of music to be guests of the Association. Such invitations shall be for the term of one year but shall be renewable; and the total number so invited shall not exceed fifty at any one time. [Amended November 5, 1942.]

§ 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the club-house, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

§ 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Thursday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

§ 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

§ 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

§ 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

§ 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

§ 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its April meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for re-election, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the club-house at least twenty days before the June monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the June monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in June, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. [Amended March 7, 1963.]

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination, indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

§ 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

HOUSE RULES

1. Admittance to the club-house cannot be claimed after one o'clock A.M.
2. There will be no breakfast on Sundays.
   Week days, breakfast will start at eight o'clock in the morning.
3. Week days, the Dining Room will be closed at nine o'clock in the evening.
4. Sundays, a buffet will be served from one o'clock in the afternoon to eight-thirty o'clock in the evening, except that there will be no restaurant or bar service on Saturdays or Sundays during the summer season.
5. The Bar will be open from noon to midnight except on Sundays and holidays, when it will be open from one o'clock in the afternoon to nine o'clock in the evening.
6. Members will not be admitted inside the Bar at any time.
7. No game of billiards shall be commenced after twelve P.M. on Saturday nights, or after one A.M. on other nights.
8. The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two A.M.

LADIES IN THE CLUBHOUSE

Ladies invited by members of the Association may visit the Art Gallery from 10:00 A.M. to 7:00 P.M., either accompanied or unaccompanied by a member. As visitors to the Art Gallery, they may not pass to other parts of the Clubhouse.

Subject on each occasion to the approval of the Chairman of the House Committee or his designee, ladies may attend luncheon, afternoon, or dinner meetings of boards and other committees of non-profit organizations operating in the public interest, provided that such meetings are held in the Medal Room of the Clubhouse. Non-members of the Association attending such meetings may not pass to the upper floors of the Clubhouse.

On special occasions arranged by the Association for Centurions and their guests, such as concerts or literary afternoons, ladies may be permitted to visit the second floor of the Clubhouse.

Except as stated above, ladies may not be admitted to the rooms of the Clubhouse.

Publicity

To avoid the possibility of involving the name of the Association in public controversy, members shall (1) refrain from using the name or the address of the Association in communications intended to be published or printed, (2) take all reasonable precautions to prevent public mention of meetings of any character that are held in the Clubhouse, and (3) assume responsibility for the exclusion from private rooms of reporters and news photographers on assignment.

Business Conferences

Members discussing business in the Clubhouse are requested to confine such conferences as far as possible to the Association's private rooms. They should refrain from laying out business papers in the common rooms of the Clubhouse.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS

FOR the guidance of members of the Association, the Year-Book contains the Requirements of the Committee and the extract from the Committee's minutes concerning the interpretation of "amateurs of letters and the fine arts."

With respect to letters concerning candidates, the members of the Association are requested to send to the Committee such information, whether favorable or unfavorable, as they feel will assist in the consideration of a candidate. Article I of the Constitution declares: "This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts." The mere endorsement of a name is of little help to the Committee in determining whether a candidate, whatever his vocation, has such breadth of interest and qualities of mind as would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in such a society.

Members are requested not to propose, second, or endorse more than one candidate in any one letter.

All communications are confidential. After final action has been taken on a candidate, letters unfavorable to him are returned to their writers by registered mail. The letters of proposers and seconders are deposited in the archives, and all other letters are destroyed, except that, by a two-thirds vote of the Committee, any particular letter may be preserved in the archives. "The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential." (Constitution, Article VI)

REQUIREMENTS OF THE COMMITTEE

1. The proposer must write to the Committee, stating the name, address, and qualifications of the candidate. The letter should convey definite information as to the candidate's background, vocation, attainments, character, and personality. If he is not an artist or an author, it should also give evidence as to those interests and tastes outside of his vocation which would make him a sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companion in a society of artists and authors.
2. The seconder must also write to the Committee in regard to the candidate. The letter should contain information of a character similar to that outlined for the proposer's letter.
3. It is strongly suggested that candidates should not be proposed or seconded by relatives.
4. The name, address, and vocation * of the candidate shall be entered in the Candidates' Book, preferably by the proposer and seconder, with their signatures. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry when the letters of recommendation have been received from both proposer and seconder. A candidacy is not completed until these letters have been received and the entry has been made.
5. The candidate must be known to at least two members of the Committee if he is a candidate for resident membership or to at least one member if he is a candidate for non-resident membership. To facilitate the introduction of candidates to members of the Committee, proposers and seconders are asked to get in touch with the Chairman of the Sub-Committee to which the candidate has been assigned.

* The Committee on Admissions has long interpreted the term "amateur" as relating to "breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination" rather than to "occupation." It therefore suggests to proposers that in filling the space (in the Candidates' Book) designated "occupation," they use some term other than "amateur" to describe the candidate's "profession or occupation," in compliance with Rule I of the Committee, as adopted by the Association.

6. The Committee must receive, in addition to the letters of the proposer and seconder, at least ten letters from other members of the Association concerning a candidate for resident membership or at least six letters concerning a candidate for non-resident membership. These letters should do more than merely endorse a candidate; they should contain information which will be a source of enlightenment to the Committee as to the candidate's qualifications.

"AMATEURS OF LETTERS AND THE FINE ARTS"

[From the Minutes of the Committee on Admissions, January 3, 1923]

Your special Committee appointed to consider the difficulties that have lately developed within the Admissions Committee over the interpretation of the word "amateur" in Article I of the Constitution, and to report on a suggestion that Article I should be amended, has made inquiries, has considered, and now reports.

We find that for more than sixty years the Committee on Admissions has been guided in passing upon qualifications of candidates not by such a narrow interpretation of the words "amateurs of letters and the fine arts" as would have required candidates to be experts or connoisseurs, but rather by the view that those words as used in the Constitution were intended to admit gentlemen of any occupation provided their breadth of interest and qualities of mind and imagination made them sympathetic, stimulating, and congenial companions in a society of authors and artists. We believe that this construction has long been clearly expressed through the Century's membership, and that the Admissions Committee may now regard it as being sanctioned and established by long usage and tradition. Consequently, we also think that the Admissions Committee need not hesitate to govern itself accordingly, and need not call upon the Club to undertake the difficult task of formulating a precise definition of the word "amateur."

On the other hand, we see no reason why it should not be admitted here that the Admissions Committee has erred in particular cases. It seems better to recognize this than to let anyone suppose that mistakes are to be accepted as precedents or a lax standard. This is stated because confusion has lately resulted from just that supposition.

The Admissions Committee should make it clear to all its members that it intends to interpret "amateur" very broadly, but never to interpret it so loosely as to cover candidates who do not clearly possess what may be called a responsive sympathy with letters and the fine arts, no matter how eminent or successful they may be, no matter how respectable socially, or how deserving of recognition on special grounds. It is understood that the writer of a technical treatise is not such an "author" as the Constitution intends; similarly, a mere collector, no matter how untiring, might well stand outside our broadest interpretations of "amateur." We do not want spiritual mediocrity. Our standard is obviously hard to define. But if the word "culture" did not sound priggish to some ears, it would perhaps suggest most briefly what the Century requires of a candidate quite apart from any special kind of ability or success.

CENTURY MEMORIALS

THE CENTURY MEMORIALS

BY ROGER BURLINGAME

Historian of the ASSOCIATION

Copley Amory, Junior

Copley was a Bostonian in every aspect: in background, ways of thinking and of speaking; we, surrounded by the corruptions of New York, were refreshed when, too rarely, he honored us with a visit. He told us little about himself though he had much to tell, and few of the Centurions who met him casually or sat next to him at the Long Table knew of his diplomatic assignments in Paris, Berlin, and Teheran or of his devotion to horticultural hobbies. Copley was a modest fellow, his deeper feelings veiled by an appearance of skepticism, and, like the best Bostonians, his judgments were leisurely but positive. Once, he would have been called a conservative, but that term has been so overlaid with contradiction and controversy that one hesitates to apply it without more definition.

Copley Amory was born in Milton, Massachusetts, and graduated, A.B., from Harvard with the class of 1912. Soon after leaving college, the Smithsonian Institution selected him to manage a small natural history expedition to arctic Siberia. Having received his law degree from Columbia Law School in 1917, he entered the United States Army as a second lieutenant and went overseas with the Second Division.

At the end of the First World War, he served with the American delegation to the Paris Peace Conference. In 1920, he became a special assistant in the State Department. The following year he was appointed secretary of the American Embassy in Berlin, a post he filled for two years when he was transferred to Rome, also as embassy secretary. In 1925, he served in the American Embassy in Teheran and was there during the political revolution about which he wrote in his book Persian Days (1929).

After he left the diplomatic service, Copley was an investment counselor in the Boston office of Loomis, Sayles and Company.

He had been a Centurion for thirty-two years.

Hamilton Basso

Devoted practitioner of the loneliest of the arts—creative writing—Ham Basso was a rebel against the men and women of the literary fringe who spend more time promoting their own public relations at publishers' cocktail parties than at their typewriters. He did his thinking as he walked through the woods of North Carolina or the streets of New York and his writing in a room locked against intruders. But away from work, he was warm and friendly, intellectually curious and indefatigably kind to beginners in his craft. The difficulties of young people engaged much of his time and sympathy, especially those who tried to write.

Because of his most popular novel, A View From Pompey's Head, he is usually associated with small town life on the Carolina seaboard, but he was equally at home in New Orleans or New York. Some of the best of his writing, indeed, reached as far as Brazil, Spain, Tahiti, and Samoa. In most of his fiction there is much philosophy as well as social awareness. His characters create the circumstances, not, as in too many novels, vice-versa.

Hamilton Basso was born in New Orleans of Italian ancestry in 1904. He studied law at Tulane University but tired of it before he graduated and found work as a newspaper reporter more congenial. After working on the New Orleans Tribune, the Item, and the Times-Picayune, his first novel, Relics and Angels, was published in 1929. Like most authors he looked back on this first attempt as "very, very bad." It was followed, however, by ten others which were increasingly well received by the critics and, which is less usual with really good books, sold well.

A Centurion friend who is also a distinguished critic in his own right, tells of Hamilton Basso's final work:

"His last novel, A Touch of the Dragon, was the hardest to write and the illness that interrupted it was not merely serious but fatal. I think we might accurately say that Ham sacrificed his life to his literary integrity and his passion for honest craftsmanship. Like his friend Thomas Wolfe, he was a hero and martyr of the act of writing. The last pages of A Touch of the Dragon were written when he was under the sentence of death, and they give no hint of his deadly fatigue; indeed, they are as perfectly finished as anything he had ever written."

We are proud that Hamilton Basso was one of us.

Alfred Bendiner

Seldom has your Historian known such an outpouring of affectionate admiration as that which followed the unexpected, untimely death of Al Bendiner. It seemed as if an abundantly illustrated memorial volume could scarcely do credit to this Centurion who was at once artist, writer, caricaturist, cartoonist, archeologist, lithographer, and architect who, in addition to erecting durable monuments to his talent, has entertained a world of people.

Al was sometimes vexed with folk who called him these things when "architect" was all he wanted to be called. Primarily, he said, he was an architect—so the cartoons and the writing must have been just overflow from his exuberance.

In architecture, he wrote in what he called "an addenda of my ability to get along with the human race":

"I have planned and directed the spending of more than a million dollars of other people's money. I have supervised work in cemeteries and museums, a rat farm and an electrical engineering school, a vanilla plantation and a bank, to say nothing of coddling female clients with closet complexes."

But, for all his protest, Al was best known for his caricatures in which he spared no one, but his subjects had to laugh at the odd qualities he saw in them and, laughing, forgave him. He saw most, perhaps, in the antics of musicians; anyway, his skill reached its peak in a collection made into a book, Music to My Eyes. Here are Stravinsky, Beecham, Heifitz, Casadesus, Iturbi, Menuhin, each caught in a familiar spasm of harmonic (or cacophonous) emotion, and provocative of long belly-laughs.

Though a purist might question the ruling of the Art Committee of The Century that, despite all the one-man shows of lithographs, cartoons, water colors, and architectural drawings and the fabulous sale of all these things, Al Bendiner was still an "amateur," it pleased him no end and he took advantage of it in the amateur shows in our gallery. He especially delighted in quick productions for the wine festivals. Perhaps no one who was a Centurion for so short a time—seven years—contributed so much gaiety or made more friends.

The funniest of Al's writing was in "Through a Martini Glass" in the Journal of the American Institute of Architects for April, 1964, about English criticism of the U.S. and vice-versa, and "How Frank Lloyd Wright Got His Medal" in Harper's for May, 1958, illustrated by drawings of the great man at his most pompous.

Alfred Bendiner was born in Pittsburgh in 1899. He was educated at Northeast High School, Philadelphia, the University of Pennsylvania, and the atelier of the American Academy in Rome. In 1918 he was a private in the Army during the First World War. For ten years after 1922, he worked in the architectural offices of Paul Cret. In his private practice of architecture, he designed, in addition to many residential and factory buildings, the Moore School of Electrical Engineering, and, in association with Harbeson, Hough, Livingston and Larson, the University of Pennsylvania Astronomical Observatory.

He drew regularly for the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, the Philadelphia Record, and the Washington Post. His lithographs are in the permanent collections of the Philadelphia Art Museum, the National Gallery, the Library of Congress, and the Uffizi Gallery in Florence. He had also done a number of murals, mainly in Philadelphia buildings.

He went on an archeological expedition to Iraq in 1936 and to Guatemala in 1960, and made extensive drawings in connection with both.

He was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects.

George Arthur Benington

Why George Benington was "Chuck" to his friends is one of those mysteries that surround most nicknames. It is good when a nickname survives a man for it recalls affection, and Chuck had plenty of that.

Chuck was one of those Century Amateurs that take the curse off a superabundance of artists, authors, and similar professionals. Unhappily his death came only three years after his election so most of his many Centurion friends were men who had known him before he became one himself. In those few years, however, he did enjoy the club and because almost every subject of conversation engaged his attention, he sat often at the Long Table where he could take part in the talk that ranges over all things and all ideas in heaven and earth.

When he was a boy, an ebb in the family fortune kept him out of college but Chuck was one of those happy young men for whom a formal education is unnecessary. Avid reading—especially in history and biography—plus the kind of mind that draws its education from the observation of men and events probably did more for him than any curricular pedagogy. Also his quick aptitude for business brought him success which amply compensated for his earlier sacrifices.

George Benington's executive work was in technological industry. He was president of the Bowker Chemical Company and vice-president of its parent company, American Agricultural Chemical. Later, he was a vice-president of Allied Chemical and chairman of the executive committee of the Perkin-Elmer instrument manufacturing corporation.

Chuck was an enthusiastic fisherman and golfer and a warm host at his popular home in New Canaan.

Kenneth Boardman

Richard Marsden Brown

Dick Brown who left us suddenly and unexpectedly at the age of forty-five was a fine portrait painter and a sensitive, intensely loyal person whose manner sometimes betrayed his ardent, zealous character. There was a nervous hesitancy about his speech which suggested weakness or indecision. Those who took advantage of this appearance were likely to regret it. Dick was an accomplished boxer and is known to have used his skill on several occasions in the defense and for the protection of his friends who were under the threat of attack. His loyalty knew no hesitancy or delay.

Perhaps his best known portrait is that of Pope John XXIII. He won this commission simply by a letter to the Pope in which he enclosed some photographs of his work. He completed the portrait after only six sittings. In the White House hangs his portrait of President Hoover, which has attracted much admiration.

Richard Marsden Brown was born in Minneapolis and studied painting at the Yale School of Fine Arts. He was a teacher of art and history at Columbia and at Syracuse University.

He was awarded the Pontifical Medal and the Personal Medal of Pope John XXIII.

Centurions will remember his gay contribution to the ad lib exhibition at one of the vintage festivals which was given the place of honor opposite the door of the gallery.

Robert W. Carle

It is not likely that William Daniel, guardian of our portals, will forget Bob Carle. It was characteristic of Bob that, hearing that Dan was ill in a Bronx hospital, had him transferred to Presbyterian in Manhattan, of which Bob was a trustee, where he could be under the care of Centurion doctors and be visited by his member friends during his convalescence.

Bob was a kind person, his thought was usually outside himself and much concerned with helping those who needed help. He aided an employee of the Downtown Association—of which Bob was a devoted member—with much the same care as he had given Dan. These instances are known, but there were many others of which he did not speak but which were guessed at by his friends.

Bob was a regular at the Centurion lunch table at the Downtown Association, and there one of his favorite companions was Bill Lockwood. When Bill's eightieth birthday came along, Bob gave him a gala dinner at The Century, an occasion that will be happily remembered by Bill's friends as long as they live.

Robert Carle was descended from an old New York family of Quakers. The Quaker artist Edward Hicks was his great-grandfather. Bob was educated at Yale, from which he graduated in 1897. The comfortable legacy left him by his father enabled him to devote his time to art collection. Three of the paintings he especially valued were by his ancestor Hicks, and these he gave to the Yale University Art Gallery. They are landscapes with figures: Biblical or historical subjects against an American background.

Bob Carle had been a Centurion for twenty-five years.

Harry James Carman

For seven consecutive years, Harry Carman was voted the most popular professor in Columbia College. He has been called a "farmer in academic robes." He never lost the rugged, earthy quality which was a legacy from a stark country childhood and youth. The beginnings of his career as one of America's top educators were in a one-room schoolhouse where he learned and later taught. His teaching at Columbia appealed to the students because of its factual emphasis, freedom from abstractions or abstruse theories and more attuned to human currents than to formulas or dates. His subject was history, particularly American history, in which he was a scholar as well as a teacher. He was a champion of the humanities, a measure of which he believed should season every specialized course from medicine to engineering. One of his most significant achievements was the development of a course which should cut across all specialization. It was called "Contemporary Civilization," and it was intended to acquaint students with the world in which they lived and in which they would practice their specialties. Harry Carman believed that without such guidance, many doctors or scientists would live out their lives in a vacuum deprived of social consciousness.

But perhaps it was as dean that Dr. Carman was most helpful to undergraduates and most beloved by them. The door of his office was always open; his talk to those who sought his counsel was always informal; he had an easy, casual way of unlocking the doors of the stickiest frustrations and seldom a student would leave his office without a sigh of relief and a sense of having dropped a burden.

Among the faculty, his presence usually melted the most frozen of conservative views and, even if opposition persisted, there was enjoyment of his tremendous enthusiasm and respect for beliefs so passionately held. In his teaching, he was called "a pioneer in evolving present attitudes toward American history." So read an editorial in the Times an honor only accorded to those who have achieved world renown or who have served the city of New York with distinction.

Harry James Carman was born in Greenfield, New York, in 1884. From his earliest years, he wanted to be a teacher, and he was persistent in his efforts, through much privation, to be admitted to a normal school. The instruction that was given him there he took back to the little schoolhouse where he had been as a boy and taught at the salary of $7.50 a week. In 1905, he entered Syracuse University and graduated four years later. He then served as principal of the Rhinebeck high school. When he went back to Syracuse, it was as a candidate for a master's degree which he took in 1914. After receiving his doctor's degree at Columbia he joined the Columbia faculty in the department of history.

He is the author of many books mainly in the realm of American history and culture. As co-author, he published Lincoln and the Patronage, A History of the American People, Quest of a Hemisphere. He is the author of a biography, Jesse Buel Agricultural Reformer.

His visits to The Century were primarily at monthly dinners and meetings. As an octogenarian, he conformed to our happy tradition of longevity.

Henry Wisdom Cave

A Centurion friend who is also a medical colleague, writes of Henry Cave:

"Throughout his long life he retained the courtliness of speech and demeanor which were the instinctive development of his southern background. He was always ready to discuss with enthusiasm his home town of Paducah, Kentucky, and the achievements of the eminent personages who also have come from there. A greatly valued possession was his collection of julep cups, the traditional receptacles used in the ceremonial preparation and consumption of that ingratiating beverage. These were of varied design and the names engraved on them in many cases were of well-known persons—one cup had been owned by Henry Clay."

One of Dr. Cave's greatest professional achievements was the development, with the collaboration of three other surgeons, of an operation by which patients whose destiny was a life of chronic invalidism were restored to such health that they could even engage in their favorite sports. The operation involved the removal, in toto, of the colon and the resulting change in the digestive tract was pronounced an improvement over the natural sequence.

Henry Wisdom Cave took his medical degree at Johns Hopkins in 1913. After a brief period of study in Germany, he interned for two years at Roosevelt Hospital in New York. During the First World War, he served with the Army Medical Corps in France. For twenty years, he was chief of Roosevelt Hospital's First Surgical Division. Meanwhile, he was Clinical Professor of Surgery at Columbia's College of Physicians and Surgeons. In 1950, he was elected president of the American College of Surgeons. He had also been president of the New York Surgical Society, vice-president and trustee of the New York Academy of Medicine, and a founder Diplomate of the American Board of Surgery.

He was an honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh and of the Royal Society of Medicine in London. He was a member of L'Académie de Chirurgie in Paris.

In the Second World War, he was head of a War Manpower Commission whose function was to choose physicians to serve in the armed forces.

He had been a Centurion since 1944.

George Fletcher Chandler

Undisturbed by fire sirens in the cacophony of Forty-third Street, George Chandler sat the greater part of each day by the south window of the East Room, reading. He was a tremendous reader, consuming book after book on nearly every subject. Our former librarian, Theodore Bolton, remembers that he read—all in The Century—Gibbon's Decline and Fall, Trevelyan's History of England, Mark Sullivan's Our Times, Winwood Reade's Martyrdom of Man, the recent histories of Frederick Lewis Allen, and many others, less known, that Bolton dug out for him.

Chandler will be long remembered by those members of The Century staff who have survived him, and he was a much loved Centurion by all those who served him. Whenever he came to the Club, he would linger in the front hall to talk with the employees about baseball or about some book he had read or a movie that he had seen. When, after his final retirement, he went to live in Kingston, New York, William Daniel was his annual visitor.

Through his long life his interests swung between surgery and the military. By profession, he was a surgeon. For a time, he was house surgeon at St. Vincent's Hospital and staff surgeon at the Kingston Hospital. But his service in the National Guard drew him toward army activities; in 1916, as a major in the 10th Infantry, he served on the Mexican border at McAllen, Texas where he was also adjutant of the First New York Brigade.

Governor Charles Whitman asked him, at the end of his border service to organize a state police. He created a constabulary free from political influence, built barracks for it, bought its horses and founded the first state police school in the country.

But surgery, the practice of which had lapsed during his military activity, drew him back. He resumed surgical work at Kingston and lived there in the few years after he had given up practice.

In his elder years, he was constantly at The Century. His opinions, which were definite and sometimes stubborn, were likely to be at variance with generally accepted views, and there was much friendly controversy over these at the Long Table.

Incidentally, George was an accomplished musician, having made his debut as a solo violinist at the age of fifteen.

His most evident personal characteristic was kindness; in spite of a gruff and sometimes an abrupt manner, he was extremely sympathetic with troubled friends and made long trips to help them out.

His armchair at the window of the East Room with him in it was long a Century landmark, and, though he has been absent while new members have come in, we of an older vintage remember it well and miss it.

He had been a Centurion for nearly half of his ninety-one years.

Samuel Chotzinoff

"Chotzi" (pronounced "Shotsi") was a small and gentle man who, nevertheless, knew how to get his way. For example, after Toscanini had presumably retired and was living in Italy, Chotzi persuaded the Maestro to return to the United States and conduct the National Broadcasting Company's Symphony orchestra. It was an achievement musical folk thought impossible, but the gentle Chotzi did it. He was, to be sure, Toscanini's intimate friend and confidant as well as N.B.C.'s music consultant.

Besides knowing more about music than most people including professionals, he was a critic (and, as such, anything but gentle), a pianist, a playwright, a novelist, and a witty and companionable Centurion. He enjoyed parties—especially those he gave for Toscanini—and, at them, used to play mild practical jokes that pleased everyone and hurt no one.

He is said to have done more for opera in English than any other American. Most of us have shuddered through French, German, and Italian operas whose words done into bad English defeated the best performers. Chotzinoff insisted on singable translations.

Samuel Chotzinoff was born in Czarist Russia, came to America when he was seventeen, and lived with his parents in New York's lower East Side. He had already learned proficiency at the piano, but as there was none at home he continued his training in a music store on East Broadway. Later, he played behind the scenes while Leo Dietrichstein sat on the stage at a dummy piano and moved his fingers over the keys. Dietrichstein got the credit by many audiences of being a brilliant pianist. In 1919, Chotzinoff became Jascha Heifitz's piano accompanist. His association with the violinist led to his marriage with Heifitz's sister. In 1924, when he was music critic for the New York World, he published his musical critique of George Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue. In 1934, he joined the New York Post as music critic and in 1936 he became consultant for the National Broadcasting Company. Actually, he was its musical director, but the title "consultant" was given him to evade a technicality on account of his age. He founded the N.B.C. opera on television and ran it as long as he lived. For this, he commissioned Gian Carlo Menotti to write Amahl and the Night Visitors.

He was the author of a novel, Eroica, and an autobiography, A Lost Paradise.

When he was elected to The Century, he wrote the secretary:

"I am delighted to be a resident member of The Century Association. I got to know the Club through the late Mr. Lawrence Gilman who used to take me to have tea in the library and I fell in love with the charming atmosphere of the place.

"I have many friends at The Century and I hope to spend a good deal of time there."

Unhappily, he died two years later so we have missed the animating company of this gentle, witty, talented man.

Thomas Maitland Cleland

Tom Cleland, known to all of us through his symbolic designs which adorn our Year-Book, our Bulletin, and our match papers, was a master of many crafts and a perfectionist in them all. He was a painter, mainly of scenes of the past whose detail suggests Breughel, an imaginative and colorful illustrator, a writer whose satire of other practitioners of the graphic arts was brilliant as well as acid, and, by profession, a book designer. For his illustration, he not only drew and painted the pictures but also devised the means of their reproduction, including the delicate silk screen process. For his work he made most of his own equipment in his elaborate workshop where machine tools could make almost anything.

Most of us who live in the country throw ourselves on the expensive mercies of a service man when anything goes wrong in the house. But not Tom. He was the original do-it-yourself-man. Once, when his oil burner gasped and died, as they all do sooner or later, Tom took the whole complex thing apart, found the broken piece, made a new one from scratch in his workshop, and got the heater going again. He did not buy tools; he made them; he even made his own ink when he did not like any that was on the market. Many Centurions visited him in the house of his own design in the fringe of Danbury, Connecticut, and were fascinated by the things they saw there. There were, for instance, a marionette theatre, a microscope with slides of otherwise invisible algae, and shaken (not stirred) martinis.

Tom Cleland was a familiar figure at the Round Table where his unorthodox political views sometimes terrified timid conformists. He was a loyal friend to persons who were pariahs in most respectable societies. He had a fund of comic ideas and funny stories in both English and French which he told in a precise diction that made them funnier.

Thomas Maitland Cleland was born in Brooklyn eighty-four years ago. He was largely self-educated and better so than many a college-schooled contemporary. He lived in Boston in his boyhood years and there acquired a passion for printing and the graphic arts that went with it. He sold his first drawing at sixteen and at twenty earned $1,000 for designing a new font of type. For a time he was a free-lance print designer in his own shop. For two years, he was art editor of McClure's magazine. He began his career as an illustrator in 1920.

In 1920, he won the annual medal of the Boston Society of Arts and Crafts, and he won three medals at the 1921 exhibition of printing at the American Institute of Graphic Arts and, again, won the Institute's gold medal in 1940. In the same year, he was awarded the gold medal of the Art Directors' Club.

He did cover, format, and typography design for several magazines including Newsweek, P.M., and Fortune and illustrated the brochures for the Pierce-Arrow and Marmon automobiles.

In 1960, his exhibition at The Century was followed by an exhibition of all his work at the New York Public Library. In that same year, he celebrated his eightieth birthday by a dinner which many of his Centurion friends attended.

A true ornament to our Club, Tom Cleland will be greatly missed.

James Albert Corscaden

On December 11, 1964, Jim Corscaden's class secretary (Wesleyan, 1902) got this letter from him:

"For myself, my activities continue as in the past many years—except in tempo. I gave up active practice but continue medical writing. As avocations, wood carving, sailing, and ensemble playing (cello). I visit around some with my children but am found pretty much most of the time in New York City or Lake George."

That night, Jim Corscaden was dead. He had suffered a cerebral occlusion and went very suddenly. "He had always seemed so rugged," wrote the secretary in his report to the class, "that I thought he had a chance of outliving the rest of us."

James Albert Corscaden was born in Providence, Rhode Island, in 1881. Having taken his Ph.B. from Wesleyan in 1902 and his M.D. from Columbia in 1906, he was an intern at Presbyterian Hospital in New York until 1909. From 1912 to 1920 he was assistant surgeon there and organized the department of radiotherapy. Since 1920, he had been consulting gynecologist at Sloane Hospital. He was on the medical faculty of Columbia University from 1938 to 1948 and, in 1940, became professor of clinical gynecology. He had been consulting gynecologist at the Englewood, New Jersey, Hospital and at Nassau Hospital in Mineola, New York. Meanwhile he had practiced medicine in New York City, specializing, since 1915, in obstetrics and gynecology. He is a Diplomate of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology, a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, the American Cancer Society, the American Radium Society, and the New York Obstetrical Society.

Considering the busy life that all these professional duties necessitated, his wide interests, varying from yachting to music, were exceptional indeed.

Randall Davey

In the latest exhibition in our art gallery of the work of artist members one smallish painting "Michel in Red Sweater" attracted much attention. Below it was a spray of evergreen that had been placed there in tribute to the painter who had recently left us. Most of us who warmed to the picture could not remember the artist who was a non-resident and had had few chances during his brief membership to visit us. It is a pity because the Centurion friends who had known him outside told of his vivacity and friendliness, his gift for storytelling, and his liking for the good things our Association provides.

Beyond his art, Randall Davey had exciting interests. He was a polo player and loved horses. When his age inhibited him in the active enjoyment of this recreation, he refereed matches. He had, too, a passion for high-powered cars and fast driving, and his eternally youthful spirit would not let him believe in the slowing down process of age. Thus, when he was well along in his seventies, he met his death in a motor accident.

In his art as in his life he followed no transient trend. Fellow painters, drawn lately into abstract and other experimental expressionism, drifted away from him. But he held the enthusiasm of the older artists. In manner of life, he turned away from the bohemian. A friend tells that "he was very much the squire and quite a dandy" having his clothes made in London and meticulously fitted to his small, lean, and wiry figure.

Randall Davey was born in East Orange, New Jersey, in 1887. He won his Bachelor of Architecture degree at Cornell in 1909; he studied under Robert Henri in New York, also in France, Holland, and Spain. From 1920 to 1930, he was instructor at the Chicago Art Institute, at the Kansas City Art Institute, and at the Broadmoor Art Academy in Colorado. In 1938, he won the National Academy of Design's Clark Prize and three years later its Altman Prize. He is represented in Detroit, Cleveland, Kansas City, and Washington museums in their permanent collections and in private collections elsewhere. He lived in Santa Fe and had been associate professor at the University of New Mexico.

William Hammatt Davis

Will Davis came from Bangor, and he carried the State of Maine with him all his life. As a friend and colleague said of him, "he was a Yankee through and through with a rough-hewn visage and a rumpled, homely expression, a thatch of unruly hair, a winning smile and a stocky and rugged frame." During the Second World War, this Centurion friend served with Will Davis on the National War Labor Board, of which he was chairman, and remembers with amusement and affection Davis's quiet way with cantankerous and controversial persons who aired their complaints before the board.

"He was a philosopher by nature, and he used to quote Plato to the effect that persuasion is the only form of creation. In the midst of the sharpest labor controversy, with the labor members of the board on one side of him and the industrialists on the other and a few of us sitting with him in between, he would somehow manage to lead the discussion in the manner of Socrates, with a canny eye for the end result, also in the manner of Socrates. He was patient and imperturbable, and he had a fund of Down East stories that he would pull out when needed to calm the angry."

It is an engaging picture! Here was this calm and calming New England lawyer turned philosopher, transforming the hot Washington meeting room into a Socratic garden, forgetting for an interval the war raging outside, lost in his art of persuasion.

William Hammatt Davis left Bangor for Washington when he was seventeen, studied at the Corcoran Scientific School for two years, and took his law degree at George Washington University in 1901. As he had chosen patent law as his profession, he spent a year as patent examiner in the United States Patent Office. He then practised with several New York law firms, becoming, in 1920, the senior member of Davis, Hoxie, Faithful and Hapgood.

In the First World War, he was legal adviser to several boards and served with the contract section of the War Department's planning division of purchase, storage, and traffic. Between the wars, he was a member of the New York State Mediation Board and of the President's Commission on Industrial Relations in Great Britain and Sweden and of the New York City Housing Authority. In 1945, he was director of the Office of Economic Stabilization and, from 1947 to 1957, a member of the patent advisory panel of the Atomic Energy Commission.

He was a member of The Century for twenty-seven years.

William de Krafft
(Postponed from 1964 Year-Book)

An expert in both locomotives and finance, William de Krafft commuted between Buenos Aires and County Kent, England. He was a true internationalist; a familiar figure in the leading capitals of Europe. In addition to his usefulness to some of the largest corporations in the country by revamping their financial structure, he was able to secure information about the foreign situation which was of value to the United States State Department.

He was born in Germantown, Pennsylvania, eighty-six years ago. After attending the Germantown Academy, he became, at seventeen, an apprentice in the Baldwin Locomotive Works. He remained with them until he had become vice-president in charge of finance and treasurer. He left in 1930 to help reorganize the United States Rubber Corporation and was named its director and chairman of finance. He then formed his own firm, the De Krafft Corporation, which acted as adviser to companies which desired to remake their financial patterns.

When the United States entered the Second World War, De Krafft became interested in the negotiation of war contracts, and the plan he devised was adopted by the army and navy.

He retired in 1957 and after that spent part of his time each year in his castle, Heronden Hall, in County Kent. During his active career, he was a member of boards of directors of more than forty American and foreign corporations.

Alphonse Raymond Dochez

The late Mr. Ludwig Bemelmans used to tell of meeting a friend who complained of having a formidable cold. "Well," Bemelmans said, "you have, of course, an incurable disease, but all you have to do is get pneumonia and you can be cured instantly." Bemelmans had just heard of the recent change in the treatment of that once dread disease, but he probably did not know that the change was largely due to the remarkable research of "Do" Dochez.

In the background of medical practice is the vast realm of investigation, and it was here that Dr. Dochez was an important figure. His clinical research of pneumonia was part of his intensive study of respiratory diseases, and, although his investigation stopped short of a cure for the common cold, he at least established the fact that it was caused by a filterable virus. Experimenting with chimpanzees, he contaminated them with throat washings taken from cold victims, washings from which all discernible bacteria had been removed. Nevertheless, the chimpanzees came down with colds.

But Do's greatest work was with scarlet fever, at one time in the lives of most of us a dangerous scourge. Here, his clinical research resulted in a preventive serum and antitoxin which has made serious epidemics of this disease a thing of the past.

Raymond Dochez was born in San Francisco in 1882. He graduated from Johns Hopkins University in 1903 and took his M.D. at Johns Hopkins Medical School in 1907. He then entered the Hopkins pathology laboratory, and a year later he obtained a fellowship in pathology at the Rockefeller Institute in New York. In 1910, the hospital of the Institute was opened and Dochez became assistant resident and bacteriologist. It was in the following five years at this hospital that he collaborated in the famous studies of pneumonia that were made there; the serum therapy he helped develop became the only effective treatment of the disease until the introduction of sulphapyridine.

As a major in the Army Medical Corps in the First World War, Dr. Dochez continued his clinical study of respiratory disease, and at war's end, he returned to Johns Hopkins as associate professor of medicine. It was then that he began his studies of the relationship of the streptococcus to scarlet fever. At the conclusion of these investigations, he directed his energies toward study of the common cold. In 1940, he was appointed chairman of the department of bacteriology at the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

It was the constantly inquiring mind of Raymond Dochez that, as a Centurion friend reminds us, "started a tremendous number of young men on the path to fruitful research."

Robert Gray Dodge

Your Historian has long contended that it is not the personal habits of its members that makes for longevity in The Century; it is merely membership in our Association. Two immortals are recorded among this year's memorials. It is told of Roscoe Pound, aged ninety-four, that he never wore an overcoat even on the coldest days. But of Robert Dodge, aged ninety-one, "many Bostonians remember the familiar sight of his muffled figure trudging on winter mornings down Beacon Street. . . ."

We all remember the pleasure that our late friends Bill Nye, Russell Allen, and Charlie Curtis brought us on their too rare visits. But of that noble group who for many years have brought the flavor of Boston and New England to our house in Forty-third Street, no one in our time was more qualified for the part than Bob Dodge. And hardly ever, in his twenty-four years of membership, did he fail to visit us whenever he visited our otherwise benighted city. His friends here were of all the generations and he always made new ones.

His achievements at the Bar were commensurate with his long life span. In 1909, he was among the founders of the Massachusetts Bar Association. Fifty years later, the Association awarded him its first gold medal "in appreciation of service to his community, and in particular to the law and lawyers. . . ." At his death, he was the oldest living former instructor of the Harvard Law School where, as editor in chief of the Harvard Law Review, he had, with the aid of the late honorary Centurion, Learned Hand, guided that publication through its formative years.

Robert Gray Dodge was born in Newburyport, Massachusetts, in 1872. He graduated from Harvard College in 1893 and from the Law School in 1897. In the same year, he was admitted to the Bar and, soon after he began practice, he became Assistant District Attorney General of the State and thus commenced his long career as a trial lawyer. He then joined the firm of Storey, Thorndike, Palmer, and Thayer which thereupon became Storey, Thorndike, Palmer, and Dodge, now Palmer, Dodge, Gardner, and Bradford. In the 1920s he was a special assistant attorney general in one of the most sensational cases in the Boston court records: the proceedings for the removal of District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier of Suffolk County for corrupt conduct.

Robert Dodge's extra-legal activities included service for seventeen years as chairman of the Board of Trustees of Wellesley College. He was also director of the National Shawmut Bank of Boston and the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company. He received honorary LL. D. degrees from Tufts and from Northeastern, whose Board he chaired for twenty-seven years.

He was one of the original members of the American Law Institute and served on its Council. From 1935 to 1956, he was a member of the United States Supreme Court Advisory Committee on Rules of Civil Procedure. For more than ten years he was a director of the American Judicature Society.

He was elected to The Century in 1940.

Norman Vaux Donaldson

The university press has been described as the channel by which scholars communicate with one another. Largely under the guidance of Norman Donaldson, it has become more than this. It has become a doorway by which the non-scholar can enter the fascinating world of academic exploration and discovery. Once devoted to subjects which required a scholar's understanding, the university presses have added publications of broad public interest in which they have approached the scope of the commercial publisher. They are not bound as he is, however, by the same circulation requirements so that books with a limited, special appeal can see the light of day.

Norman ("Nig") Donaldson, as director of the Yale University Press, was a leader in this trend. During his forty years with the Press, he was associated with the publication of more than 2,000 titles. When, in 1959, he retired, he left to his successors a publishing house which had acquired world-wide celebrity.

Donaldson was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1891. He was educated at Hotchkiss and Andover and was in the class of 1915 at Yale. In the First World War, he was in command of a submarine chaser and was awarded the Navy Cross. At war's end, he joined the Yale Press, then under the direction of Centurion George Parmly Day. During the 1920s, he joined a group of other university press representatives who met for occasional luncheon discussions. This informal gathering which called itself the Pure Tobacco Growers Association eventually evolved into the American Association of University Presses. Donaldson was its first president.

He was a member of The Century for nearly twenty-five years.

William Carl Fels

"Bennington College," wrote President William Fels in a slightly satirical report for the College Handbook, "is a small, rural, private, experimental women's college of high quality which emphasizes the development of the individual. It shares the cultural advantages of New York, Boston, and Montreal. Its hill is moderately high. From it, on a clear day, you can just see, beyond the toilet paper factory, the historic Walloomsac River flowing northward away from Williamstown where there is a small, rural, private, experimental college of high quality for well-rounded men." Dr. Fels had found that colleges, in the medium of the handbook, tended to describe themselves as both large and small, both urban and rural, situated on a hill and located near a body of water. His report is a pleasing spoof on educational public relations.

William Carl Fels was born in New York City and graduated from Columbia College in 1937. He had won the Brainerd Memorial Prize for "his qualities of mind and character." He taught the humanities at Cooper Union until 1942 when the Second World War called him into the army. During the war, he rose to captain in the Ordnance Corps. At war's end, he returned to Columbia as veterans' counselor. In 1948, he was appointed secretary to the College Entrance Examination Board, and, four years later, he was its associate director. In 1956, he was Columbia's assistant provost. Meanwhile, on a leave of absence from Columbia, he served as executive secretary of the Ford Foundation College Grants program which disbursed $260 million to increase faculty salaries. He had also edited the College Handbook, which had given him the inspiration for his satire.

He had been president of Bennington since 1957. He had a deep interest in education, and it is probable that he would have gone far in this direction had not cancer cut him off at the tragically early age of forty-eight. He had been vice-chairman of the American Council on Education and of the Vermont Foundation of Independent Colleges, a director of the New England Council and a member of the Committee on Educational Interchange Policy of the Institute of International Education.

Charles Garside

The legal mind often reaches far outside its professional orbit, but few lawyers found more diverse interests than Charlie Garside. The bench and politics naturally followed his talents and training, but his intense concentration on medicine and hospitalization and his active participation in military affairs were uncommon. And Charlie was something of a sociologist, besides, concerned about problems of poverty and especially those of racial discrimination.

We in The Century remember him happily; he was often among us, giving each who spoke to him his full attention, offering advice or sympathy when asked for it, but always with the qualification natural to a modest man and never pressing his counsel upon anyone. We were drawn intuitively toward Charlie, confident of instant response and friendliness.

Charles Garside was born in Middletown, Connecticut, in 1898, and took his bachelor's degree at Princeton in 1923 with honors in history and politics. His education was interrupted by the First World War in which he enlisted as a private in the Marine Corps. At war's end, he took a law degree at Cornell and was admitted to the New York Bar. For ten years, he was associated with the firm of Choate, Larocque and Mitchell in New York, of which he became a partner in 1927; in 1934, Mayor La Guardia appointed him justice of the New York City Municipal Court. In 1936, he became a partner of Centurion Bethuel Webster in the firm of Webster and Garside.

Meanwhile, he had been active in the Young Republican Movement and had been vice-president of the New York Young Republican Club, activities which led him to run for Congress in 1946 from New York's 25th Congressional District, a candidacy which was narrowly defeated by that of Representative Charles A. Buckley. The following year, Governor Dewey appointed him chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination. In 1948, the governor named him trustee of New York State University.

Some years before this, Charles had become interested in medical education and in medical activities generally. In the Second World War, he served as colonel on the Army General Staff and as director of the international division of the Medical Department Supply Service. In this post, he supervised the delivery, under the lend-lease program, of medical supplies and hospital equipment throughout the world.

It was this work which led to his appointment as president of the Associated Hospital Service. This was equivalent to heading Blue Cross which is, perhaps, the service for which Charlie is best known. In it he was an enthusiastic worker and in connection with it he held a number of other posts including the directorship of the Hospital Council of Greater New York. His interest in education was signalized by his acting presidency of the University of the State of New York.

It is sad that Charles Garside left us at an age when most men are in their prime, but we are grateful for the privilege of knowing him.

Elmer Wesley Greene

Elmer Greene is associated in the minds of Centurions with our late loved member Allen Whipple, whose portrait he painted and which has since hung in the Presbyterian Hospital.

Some of Elmer Greene's other portraits are of Pope Pius XII, Cardinal Spellman, the late Centurion, President Herbert Hoover, former Governor Le Roy Collins of Florida, A. P. Giannini, Congressman Joseph W. Martin, Jr., of Massachusetts, and Edwin N. Griswold, dean of the Harvard Law School.

Greene was also a muralist; his work is in the buildings of the University of Chicago, the Maryland Casualty Company, and the Ford Motor Company as well as in several Massachusetts schools.

Elmer Wesley Greene was born in Boston in 1907. He studied at the Massachusetts School of Art and the Boston Museum of the Fine Arts. For six years he was awarded the Medal of the Jordan Marsh Gallery.

His portraits hang in the State Capitol in Boston, Dartmouth College, Kansas State College, the Archdiocese of New York, the Roselawn Seminary in Chicago, and the Pentagon in Washington.

Carroll Clark Hincks

Too many years ago for us to keep quiet about it any longer, a group of well-intentioned Centurion lawyers, having heard rumors about Cosmos and other clubs, decided that The Century was not really a club at all but an institution devoted exclusively to the promotion of arts and letters and should, therefore, be exempt from the taxes leveled on certain purely social associations. Having brought claims for rebates from the tax authorities, the matter came before non-Centurion (then) Judge Carroll Hincks. The judge asked to be shown the Clubhouse. In its eagerness to impress him, the House Committee, forgetting (or ignoring) the purpose of the judge's visit, decided to put on a show for him that he would not soon forget. And so, indeed, it proved.

Judge Hincks was met at the door and immediately escorted to the bar. There he was entertained by as many Centurions who could crowd into our small drinking facilities (other space being essential to the promotion of arts and letters). He was then escorted to a luncheon of terrapin and grouse. After a quick glance at the library and the art gallery, he was led to the pool room where he spent the rest of the day.

The following day, recovering from the hospitalities extended to him in the quiet of his chambers, he wrote his opinion. He had loved every minute at The Century, but, try as he might, he could not recall any aspect of the Association which suggested exclusive dedication to the promotion of arts and letters. So he wrote as gentle an opinion as his conscience would allow and The Century got no exemption.

But instead of The Century impressing him on that celebrant day, Carroll Hincks had so impressed the Centurions who met him that little time was lost before he was proposed for membership.

The defeated lawyers and, indeed, the entire Bar (legal) of the city, has attempted to draw a veil over this incident.

But some of us are glad to know that there was once so adventurous a group among us, that they would try anything once. And lawyers at that.

Federal District Judge Carroll Hincks of the United States Court was one of the most highly esteemed of the circuit judges. "His character, cultivation, and detached professional outlook were remarkable even in a court that has an enviable reputation." So writes a Centurion colleague. He was officially described at a court session following his death:

"Although a man of firm convictions and abiding loyalties he was also modest, considerate and open-minded—altogether as free from prejudice, pride and vanity as it is possible for a man to be. He gave to his country in peace, as in war, a full measure of his devotion. He will be remembered in this Circuit as one of its greatest judges."

Carroll Clark Hincks was born in Andover, Massachusetts. He was educated at Phillips Andover Academy and at Yale from which he graduated in 1911. In 1916, he served on the Mexican border as a field artillery captain in the Connecticut National Guard. He took his law degree at Yale Law School in 1917. Soon after, he served overseas in the First World War.

He practiced law in New Haven and in Waterbury, Connecticut, until, in 1931, President Hoover appointed him to the Federal District Court of Connecticut. In 1953, President Eisenhower made him an appeals court judge for the Second Circuit.

One of Carroll Hincks's obituaries writes of his reputation for a wry sense of humor and an ability to ask penetrating questions. What he asked on that gay afternoon is part of our celebrated secret, but in his opinion he conceded that some of the illumination provided by the genius of individual members "may have been set by the sparks struck by The Century flint."

Wilder Hobson

Wilder was a leader of young Centurions (there really are a good many), who could be distinguished from their elders by standing, before lunch, at our little bar instead of sitting in dignity at round tables and telling undignified stories. At the bar, Wilder was the focus of all attention because he was both witty and friendly; a master of quick repartee that was wholly without guile or cruelty; a man of wide knowing and happy telling—in short, a Centurion of Centurions and one whose leaving was almost unbearable.

His job was book critic, his avocation, jazz. He played the trombone loud and long, preferably in what is known as a Dixieland band. He joined such a band at the age of fifteen in Squirrel Island, Maine; a group with the provocative name of the Hennessey Five Star Orchestra, and he played in similar amateur enterprises most of his life—usually the trombone with what one of his journalistic colleagues called "more gusto than finesse." He combined profession and hobby in a book: American Jazz Music.

At his funeral, his cousin, professor of Divinity, Amos Wilder said:

"Wilder was really all positive. This kind of affirmative stance is supposed to be 'out' today. But Wilder had somehow relocated the old virtues so that they were authentic again, and carried it off against all the rules. . . . there just has to be another Big Top somewhere where this kind of Act can go on."

Wilder Hobson was born in Brooklyn fifty-eight years ago. At Yale, he was class poet and chairman of the "Lit." He took his Ph.D. there in 1928. He began his career as staff writer for Time and Fortune and was on Fortune's board of editors for four years following 1945. He joined Newsweek in 1951 and became the magazine's senior book critic. He also contributed widely to other magazines.

Wilder's intimates knew of the courage with which he faced failing eyesight and the painful eye operations of his later years.

At fifty-eight Wilder Hobson was still a young Centurion. And, as a young Centurion, he left us far too soon.

Herbert Clark Hoover

Eight presidents of the United States have been Centurions, but none has been elected to The Century during his administration. Herbert Hoover was no exception; he became one of us in 1919 when no one dreamed that he would have an even greater honor conferred upon him in the course of an uncommon career already started. His Commission for Relief in Belgium had fed some ten million people, many of whom would otherwise have starved, and, after the United States had entered the war, he had been American Food Administrator. He had done these things against strong opposition, some of it even from his own countrymen; the immense scale of the commission's operations roused suspicion by allies as well as enemies, but he had overcome all obstacles, largely by his personal persuasiveness. So when, soon after New Year's, 1919, he was proposed for membership in The Century, he was being thanked by millions of suffering people all over the world. Most of mankind had felt compassion, but Hoover alone had had the skill and strength to implement it.

His postwar work was carried on by the American Relief Commission of which he had been appointed chairman and which had its headquarters in Paris. Here, he answered the pleas of twenty-two countries for aid. These included the former enemies, now defeated, and Russia, a former ally which had left the war in 1917. The difficulty of conducting his operations was aggravated by the chaos of currency fluctuations and attempts at price controls. Added to Hoover's administrative work, therefore, were the complications of international politics, the need for constant diplomacy in the overcoming of national prejudice, for thwarting the impulses of greed and corruption, and the cutting of masses of red tape. Through all this uncertain time, he gave his thought and energy without compensation. The men of his staff, many of them Centurions, gave him unqualified praise, not only for his highly efficient administration but for the sympathetic direction of his subordinates.

Herbert Clark Hoover was born in West Branch, Iowa, in 1874. His father was a Quaker blacksmith. By the time the boy was nine, he was an orphan. His first job was as an office boy at ten. By 1891, he had earned and saved enough to put himself through college. He entered Stanford University in California in that year and took his degree—A.B. in engineering—in 1895. On his graduation he undertook professional work as a mining engineer not only in the United States but in many foreign countries, including Russia, China, and Australia. This occupied him until 1913 when he represented the Panama-Pacific Exposition in Europe. When the First World War broke out in 1914, he organized the American Relief Commission in London and directed the evacuation of some 200,000 Americans from Europe. From this year, the direction of his life changed; he became an internationally recognized expert in massive relief. President Harding appointed him Secretary of Commerce in 1921, and he was reappointed by President Coolidge.

In 1928, he defeated Alfred Smith in the presidential election, and he took office in March, 1929, when the financial boom was in full swing. In October of that year, the crash in the stock market began the Great Depression for which President Hoover, by a cruel turn in public opinion, was held largely responsible. This was the tragedy of Hoover's life, and he bitterly resented what historians have come to believe was a total injustice. Nevertheless, the accusation must be held accountable when he lost the election to Franklin Roosevelt in 1932.

A Centurion friend has contributed this memory:

"A number of years ago, Mr. Herbert Hoover told me of his first visit to The Century when he was introduced as a guest by Clarence King, the geologist, who had been a member since 1874. Mr. Hoover's book Principles of Mining had been published in 1909 and his translation of Agricola's De Re Metallica from the first Latin edition—done with the help of Mrs. Hoover—was published in 1912. . . . Mr. Hoover, who must have been in his late twenties, spoke of the honor of being in the Club and wondered if he might ever belong."

On Hoover's death at ninety, Centurion Lewis Strauss said over the National Broadcasting Company's network:

"When a great tree falls we are amazed to see how meagre the landscape seems without it. So it is when a great man dies. . . . Millions are bereaved by the death of this good man—not alone we his fellow citizens whom he served with wisdom and honor and joy but other millions who owe to him their very lives. . . ."

So it is more fitting to thank Herbert Hoover than to mourn him. We are grateful for his long presence among us and for his solace to a troubled world.

Ernest Martin Hopkins

"It has been said," writes a friend and admirer, "that there are men who lift the age they inhabit so that all men walk on higher ground. Such men are rare, but Ernest Martin Hopkins was one of them. His dedication to fundamental values, his generosity of spirit and faith in the worth and dignity of human beings—these were the strengths of the man that were evident to those who knew him and had an impact on them because he had the facility to inspire others."

Those who knew him were many; those who lived their college years in his magnetic field were many more. Alumni are still speculating how many boys went to Dartmouth simply and only because "Hoppy" was president there. When he came to the presidency in 1916, Dartmouth was a small college of a thousand students, deficient in physical equipment and low in endowment resources. In his twenty-nine years as president, the enrollment more than doubled; so, too, did the plant, and the endowment fund reached thirty million. Alumni who have followed this growth into the great liberal arts institution that it is today, hold Hoppy's personal leadership responsible.

Dr. Hopkins came to his post from an unusual background. He was not a teacher nor an academician in any sense. He had been labor relations consultant for a number of corporations including the Western Electric Company and Filene's Boston department store. Because of this there was opposition among the alumni to his appointment as Dartmouth's president, but as soon as he set forth his theories on academic freedom and liberal education and put them into practice their first disfavor turned to admiration and affection. Though his choice of teachers and lecturers was often thought to be unorthodox—he once said he would be glad to have Lenin and Trotsky speak at the college—even conservative alumni felt that if Hoppy wanted radicals there must be good reason for it.

Ernest Martin Hopkins was born in Dunbarton, New Hampshire, in 1877. His father was a Baptist minister and family circumstances forced the boy to work at all sorts of jobs during the years of his formal education. He was obliged to stay out of school for a year to work as timekeeper and paymaster in a granite quarry. His study as an undergraduate at Dartmouth was similarly interrupted. But the then president, Dr. Tucker, had noticed him and obtained a scholarship for him. For a few years, he worked in the administrative office of the college, and, in 1910, he left to engage in his consulting career. But Dartmouth would not let him go for long and six years later called him back to be president.

Dr. Hopkins was a Centurion for forty-one of his eighty-six years.

Henry Greene Hotchkiss
(Postponed from 1964 Year-Book)

When the air above us became crowded, the law followed aircraft into the skies and Henry Hotchkiss followed the law. He had had intensive training in aviation law, having been a director of the Curtiss-Wright Corporation and general counsel to the Airspace Industries Association and the Aircraft Builders Council.

But these professional activities in which he was a pioneer occupied only a part of his varied and busy life. He was a leader in community services and of charitable organizations; interested in the welfare of both young and old, he was a director of the New York City Youth Board and he headed the State Committee on Aging.

Henry Greene Hotchkiss was born in New York in 1893. He was a member of the class of 1913 at Williams College and, in 1916, took his law degree at Columbia Law School. His Treatise on Aviation Law, published in 1928, has been considered a pioneer text on the subject. After practicing with the firm of Spence and Hotchkiss, he became a senior partner in Lowenstein, Pitcher, Hotchkiss and Parr. In 1938, he became editor of U.S. Aviation Reports.

He was chairman of the Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies, a trustee of the Community Service Society, president of the Riverdale Country School, and vice-chairman of the Greater New York Fund. He was a junior warden of St. George's Episcopal Church.

In the First World War, he served as first lieutenant of field artillery.

Arthur Hunter

At the age of ninety, Arthur Hunter said to a fellow golfer, "It is the companionship on the golf links which fascinates me. I only play nine holes and can still negotiate the distance if I take plenty of time and don't walk too fast." But Dr. Hunter was ninety-four before his name was "pegged out" on The Century Board, and he became one of our immortals. During his long and fruitful career, he might be said to have been in the "profession" rather than the "business" of life insurance. As an actuary, his work was largely with physicians and men engaged in medical research. The more than fifty papers of which he was the author are mostly on medical subjects as was the book he edited, Alcohol and Man, which is now accepted as a standard textbook.

Arthur Hunter was born in Edinburgh in 1869 and educated at Edinburgh's celebrated George Watson's College. The curriculum of this school inspired several of its boys with a desire to make actuarial work their life's vocation. A number of them came, as Hunter did, to the United States to practice their profession. Hunter joined the New York Life Insurance Company in 1898 as chief of the Mathematical Division, from which he advanced to Assistant Actuary, Actuary, and finally Chief Actuary of the company, an office he attained after twenty years of service. He was also the company's vice-president.

Dr. Hunter made many useful contributions to insurance and actuarial societies in the United States and overseas. One of the most important was a study made in collaboration with the late Oscar Rogers, the New York Life's chief medical director, which made it possible to insure so-called "substandard risks," who had previously been denied the benefits of life insurance.

During the First World War, Dr. Hunter was chief actuarial adviser to the United States government. After the war, he was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and in 1927 was awarded the honorary degree of LL.D. by Edinburgh University.

He was a Centurion for sixty years—a senior member.

Charles Douglas Jackson

"C.D.," as he was universally known, was one of those people whose death was, and still is, incredible. His funeral was thronged with unbelieving folk who were sure that, somewhere in that church, he was listening to his favorite Bach, "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring."

Exuberant with an enthusiasm that everyone about him caught—however drab their mood—C.D. was as perpetually moving as the world compass of his activity demanded. His colleagues formed the Fun and Games Committee of the C.D. Jackson Hello and Good-bye Society in which, through a sequence of flashes, his resounding laugh echoed from one meeting to the next. No one was ever certain whether he was in London, Paris, or Rome with the full and elegant linguistic equipment for each place plus a capacity for charming diplomats and cabinet ministers with both courtly manners and informal talk. Whoever or wherever you were you were at home with C. D. Jackson.

"When I think of all the evenings we spent with C.D.," writes a Centurion friend, "of all the laughs we had, of all the Bollinger we consumed, and of the violence of our arguments, I sadly realize that nothing quite so vital and quite so much fun will happen again."

Charles Douglas Jackson was born in New York in 1902. His first schooling was in Switzerland, then at Hill. He graduated from Princeton in 1924 and joined the family business, the importation of building marble and stone. It was the demands of this business for frequent overseas trips that laid the foundations of a career that was largely international. But when American construction came to a standstill with the Depression, Jackson sought another outlet for his talent and experience. He found it with Time where he charmed Centurion Henry Luce into making him his assistant. From then on, he commuted, so to speak, among Time, Life, and Fortune with leaves of absence for war work.

An active interventionist, Jackson organized and headed the Council for Democracy whose purpose was to combat isolationist sentiment. In 1942, he went on a State Department mission to Turkey, and, the following year, he became deputy chief of the Psychological Warfare branch of Allied Air Force Headquarters in North Africa. His next assignment was in the psychological warfare division of General Eisenhower's headquarters in London. Here his job was propaganda in Europe for the support of the D-Day invasion of 1944.

At war's end, he was made publisher of Fortune, but again he took a sojourn from journalism to set up Radio Free Europe. After Eisenhower's election in 1952, he became assistant to the President. In 1955, he served as a member of the United States delegation to the United Nations.

In the intervals of all this exigent work, he served on the boards of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of the Free Europe Committee, of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, the Metropolitan Opera Association, Project HOPE, and the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

Perhaps his most important work on Time Incorporated was his organization of the overseas division of the company which was known as Time-Life international.

He was elected to The Century in 1948.

William Alexander Jackson

"Our Grand Acquisitor" was the title accorded to William Jackson in the citation accompanying Harvard's honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters in 1962. During his twenty-six years as librarian of Harvard's Arthur Amory Houghton Library, Jackson had built one of the world's finest collections of rare books, manuscripts, and objects of the graphic arts. It is especially remarkable for its variety. One might expect, at Harvard, an abundance of the works of nineteenth-century New England authors, but great attention has also been given to John Keats and to the poems of Tennyson, many of which were in manuscript and unpublished, some in first draft or revised script. There is, too, a rich group of the works of Russian literature, early books on the history of science, early maps, and incunabula of European writing. In some of these fields, the library is said to be unsurpassed. In the years of Jackson's stewardship it underwent triple expansion.

William Alexander Jackson was born in Rockingham, Vermont, in 1905. He was descended from a family of Loyalists who, at the close of the American Revolution in 1783, migrated to Nova Scotia. For that reason, perhaps, among others, he has always been an enthusiastic Anglophile, and he has done much work and has been greatly honored in England. He graduated from Williams College in 1927. From 1930 to 1938, he was engaged in cataloguing the Carl H. Pforzheimer Library in New York and then went to Harvard as associate professor of Bibliography with the Widener Library.

While he was in this post, he showed the breadth of his interests by accepting a collection of one hundred records of swing music by Benny Goodman. Thus, he said, the popular music of our times would be preserved for study by future historians whereas, unhappily, the sound of the music played in Shakespeare's theater in London had been lost.

By 1964, Professor Jackson had nearly finished his revised edition of the Short-title Catalogue of English Books, 1475–1640, on which he had worked for forty years. In the spring of that year Oxford University added another to the honorary degrees he had already received from Williams and Harvard. He was a Fellow of many English and American bibliographical societies and was generally acknowledged to be the leading bibliographer of the world.

A Centurion colleague who had worked with him at Harvard tells that he substituted books for food and sleep. It was his habit to read a book every night before going to bed. "Three hours' sleep a night," he would say, "is enough for a man and four for a woman. A fool needs five hours."

Perhaps it was Jackson's exclusive devotion to books, rejecting the leisure and recreation that other men enjoy, that contributed to his untimely death. Fifty-two is too young to die, especially for one whose living is so valuable to the cultural world.

John Christen Johansen

John Johansen would have made a bad politician because he did not understand compromise. And yet he worked in that branch of painting in which the art of the politician often plays a part. Portraitists have been tempted to please a wealthy sitter against their artist's conscience. If John was ever brushed by such a temptation, he turned from it instinctively. The rejection was not argued or arguable; it was a reflex. His honesty, like his talent, was part of him; it was as recognizable and as admirable.

John endeared himself to us in The Century—even to those who had not the privilege of knowing him—by his portraits of our favorites. He caught the imponderable thing that made them loved whether the portrait was of President Paul Kieffer or of William Daniel.

Those who sat for him remember the stark simplicity of his studio. It was strictly and solely a workshop. There were no concessions to comfort in the shape of soft chairs or sofas. The walls were bare but for one small Velásquez print. The place was tense with the artist's single preoccupation with his art; to be the subject of his work there was an experience not easily forgotten.

John Christen Johansen was born in Copenhagen, but came to the United States in his infancy. His boyhood was spent in Chicago, and he studied under Frank Duveneck at the Chicago Art Institute. He married Jane MacLane, like himself a distinguished portraitist. Her death came four months to the day before his.

The subjects of his paintings included Field Marshal Foch, Earl Haig, Herbert Hoover, Jan Paderewski, Georges Clemenceau, and Woodrow Wilson. He has painted portraits of Centurions Jonas Lie, Paul Manship, Robert W. De Forest, Richard Kimball, Lawrence Grant White, Roy Brown, Irving S. Olds, LeRoy Kimball, Morris Hadley, Herbert Brownell, and Elihu Root, Senior. In 1953 he had a one-man show in The Century art gallery.

Animated and energetic even in his eighty-eighth year John's slender figure was familiar in our clubhouse as it had been for forty-four years. We shall miss him there, but we shall live among many monuments to his memory.

Eric Kebbon

To us who knew him in The Century, Eric was a quiet modest fellow who did not betray—to us laymen, at least—the professional skill for which he was celebrated. To us, he never talked about himself and rarely, about architecture. Yet among his colleagues, he was known as a forceful leader, insistent upon the values that he intuitively recognized. He was tall, slender, and handsome with a dignity that was native. He spoke slowly and with thought behind his words. For many years The Century was like a second home to him, and it was only during his last illness that we missed him from our Clubhouse. He belonged to one of our older vintages.

Eric Kebbon was born in Brooklyn of Bostonian parents in 1890. He received his B. Arch. degree from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1912. After his graduation, he was associated with Welles Bosworth in planning new buildings for M.I.T. Until 1917, he was resident architect there during the buildings' construction.

In the First World War, he was captain and major in the U.S. Army's Corps of Engineers.

His early work had given him the impulse which dominated his life toward the design of educational buildings. At war's end, he was junior partner in charge of projects for Brown University and Western Reserve Academy, and his private practice began with a development plan for Clark University in Worcester, Massachusetts, and the American School of Architecture in Albania. From 1934 to 1937, he was consulting architect for the U.S. Treasury Department. In 1938, he began the most significant work of his life in the design and construction of New York City schools. From then until 1951, he was the official architect for the New York Board of Education. More than one hundred school buildings and playgrounds bear the marks of his talent.

Chosen as an "outstanding example of school architecture," by the Municipal Art Society, was Eric's Chelsea School near Chelsea Park in Manhattan. For this design the Society awarded him a bronze plaque which carries the Society's medal. The school is described in detail in a New Yorker article by Mr. Lewis Mumford.

Eric was a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects and an Associate of the National Academy of Design. He was awarded the Certificate of Merit by the New York State Association of Architects for the design of the J. Fenimore Cooper Junior High School.

He was a member of The Century for thirty-six years, nearly half his life.

Clarence Buddington Kelland

A Centurion colleague and friend describes Bud Kelland as "a Middle Western newspaper man endowed with special and very delightful gifts. For many years he was one of the gayest and most successful of the writers of magazine fiction. For a generation he was one of the nimblest of presiding officers at luncheons and dinners attended by businessmen and their associates in the arts. When he presided, Bud Kelland seemed to be the very embodiment of New York impudence and irreverence."

Being an importation from Michigan, he had soon acquired these characteristics, said to be peculiar to our city. An example was his introduction of the late Centurion Nicholas Murray Butler, then president of Columbia as "an aspiring young man in hope of a hearing." On another occasion, he gave a like presentation of Robert Taft, leader of his party in the Senate.

Though he graduated from the Detroit College of Law, journalism soon drew him away from the legal profession. On the Detroit News, the city editor called him a "not very good reporter," but this comment did not prevent him from becoming one of the paper's editors, eventually the political editor. This post pleased him as it gave him an opportunity for angry emphasis on his far-to-the-right Republican views. He used to explain that "I came from poor but Republican parents." A like opportunity came in 1940 when he was named Republican national committeeman from Arizona and chairman of the conservative wing's executive and publicity committees.

He wrote sixty novels and more than two hundred short stories. Most of his short fiction appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and the American Magazine. Writers who aspired to literary distinction (whom Bud Kelland called "arty") were not always enthusiastic about the quality of his work. Nevertheless, he created characters who seemed destined to become part of American folklore: among them Scattergood Baines, Mark Tidd, and Mr. Deeds. Many of the stories were made into movies, notably Speak Easily starring Buster Keaton and Mr. Deeds Goes to Town with Gary Cooper.

When he came to The Century, he was usually surrounded by men who wanted to laugh and did laugh, even when they did not agree with his extreme political opinions, because his diatribes were so witty. Perhaps men like Bud Kelland are good for us when we tend to take ourselves too seriously. We are glad to have been exposed, even as it had to be occasionally, to his irreverent but cheerful companionship.

Allen Trafford Klots

Allen began his Report of the President (of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York) for 1955-56 with these words:

"This report was written where all reports and briefs should be written—on the deck of a 40-foot sloop that was placidly sailing along the coast of New England. The sky was clear, the winds moderate, and cold beer and nourishing food were served regularly by the galley. Thus, the report may seem to be over-optimistic, but if it does there are extenuating circumstances."

Allen was roused from his memories of the year when "suddenly out of the galley below the present returned: it was my turn, said the crew, to peel potatoes. The reverie was ended; the past, like the white water in our wake, had bubbled and frothed for a time, but at last had to smooth out and become one with the rest of the rolling sea. My year was becoming one with the history of the Association. As I watched it go I thought how much the richer I was for it, and how very poor it would have been without the help and kindness of every member."

No ordinary lawyer this, content to follow the daily routine his profession demanded of him, but a thinker, an analyst of social perplexities, a fighter for reform, and a crusader for justice, not only in the courts but in Congress. One of his significant attacks was on congressional investigating procedures with special reference to those of the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Allen Trafford Klots was born in Brooklyn, was educated at Yale from which he graduated in 1909 and Harvard Law School where he took his law degree in 1913 and where he was an editor of the Law Review. When he joined the firm of Winthrop and Stimson as a clerk, Centurion Henry Stimson realized that he had an exceptionally thorough and intelligent worker in Allen.

The First World War, in which he served as an officer in the 77th Division, A.E.F., interrupted his legal activities, but, at war's end, he returned to Winthrop and Stimson and was made a partner. Meanwhile, he had served as adjutant to Stimson, then a lieutenant colonel in the 305th Field Artillery.

When Henry Stimson became Secretary of State, he appointed Allen his assistant, and he became one of the Secretary's closest advisers. In 1932, he went with Secretary Stimson to the General Disarmament Conference in Geneva.

In New York, Allen gave unfailing support to movements to improve the organization of the courts and to take the selection of judges out of politics. More than anyone else, he was responsible for the Bar Association's study of Children and Families in the Courts and for the Citizens Committee for Modern Courts, which supported the reorganization movement led by Centurion Harrison Tweed. He headed the Columbia University Project for Effective Justice which, for the first time, applied scientific techniques to studies of the business of the courts—studies which have an important bearing on problems of court congestion, the use of civil juries, the administration of personal injury cases, and the like.

Allen was always an enthusiastic and skillful yachtsman and, in the Second World War, lent his 40-foot cutter to the Coast Guard to patrol Long Island.

Philip James McCook
(Postponed from 1964 Year-Book)

To have served actively with the army in three wars is, for The Century, at least, a unique distinction. But Judge

McCook was simply following a family tradition. Fifteen of the "Fighting McCooks," including Philip's father, had fought for the Union in the Civil War. At a dinner in his honor in 1946, the army's Judge Advocate General paid this tribute to Judge McCook:

"Not content with having fought in the Spanish-American War and the First World War, he literally fought his way back into the Army for World War II, at an age when most men are satisfied to relax and read history instead of helping to make it. As a member of the Judge Advocate General's Department . . . he performed invaluable services in connection with the administration of military justice and the rehabilitation program of the Army. In the performance of that duty he flew all over the world but always with his feet on the ground."

In 1898, he was an infantry corporal; at the age of forty-four he was an infantry major in the First World War and a Colonel at sixty-nine in the Second.

Philip McCook is closely identified with Hartford, Connecticut. He was one of the most distinguished alumni of Trinity College. On his death, an editorial in the Hartford Times gave this tribute: "Few men in public or private life have contributed their talents, energy and time as generously on behalf of their fellow men as Judge McCook," and Dr. Jacobs, Trinity's president, said, "In his long and useful life he was an exemplar of the time honored motto of his College, pro ecclesia et patria. No one has served God, Country and fellow men with greater effectiveness."

After graduating from Trinity in 1895, Philip James McCook took his law degree at Harvard Law School in 1899. He was a life trustee of Trinity from 1927. From 1919 to 1943, when he retired to go into the army, he was a Justice of the Supreme Court of New York.

"He was," writes a Centurion friend, "a friendly and outgoing companion and unusually well liked."

Roswell Magill

(Postponed from 1964 Year-Book.)

Centurions this year were reminded of our distinguished member who died in 1963 by the full length portrait by Paul Trebilcock, which hung on the west wall of the Gallery in the 1964 exhibition of the works of member artists. Of Roswell, a Centurion friend writes that "he was one of those rare and delightful fellows who really was an expert but talked like a common or garden person. He was a valued member of the so-called 'Society for Literary Knowledge' a group of a dozen or more Centurions who met frequently to discuss books. . . . In a quiet way he was always gay."

Roswell Magill was born in Auburn, Illinois, in 1895. He graduated from Dartmouth in 1916 and took his law degree at the University of Chicago in 1920. In the same year, he was admitted to the Illinois Bar and practiced in Chicago until 1926. He was admitted to the New York Bar in 1928 and was from that time counsel to Dunnington, Bartholow and Miller and a member of Cravath, Swaine and Moore. He had been a teacher of law since 1921, first as instructor at the University of Chicago and later as full professor at Columbia. For two years he was attorney to the Treasury Department of the United States and from 1933 to 1938, Assistant Secretary and Under Secretary of the Treasury. In 1940, he was a governor of the New York Stock Exchange and a year later, chairman of the Connecticut Tax Survey Commission.

He was a captain of infantry in the army in the First World War.

He was a member of the American and New York State Bar Associations, of the American Philosophical Society, and of Phi Beta Kappa.

He had been a Centurion since 1936.

James Mount Nicely

On the day that the notice of Jim Nicely's death was posted in The Century, his name seemed to be on the lips of everyone you met in the Club. All seemed to have known him or known about him and the abundant reminiscences were punctuated with expressions of shock and sorrow at his leaving. Later, those who went to Jim's funeral at the Brick Presbyterian Church, heard Centurion Paul Wolfe say that Jim not only kept the faith but, what was rarer, he had a faith to keep. So, Jim was admired and he was loved.

We, in The Century, who did no business with him outside, knew him as an active and interested Centurion. He served on the Stim, Admissions and Investment committees. In all, his wisdom and frankness prevailed over the doubting and the hesitant. On the Investment Committee, his knowledge of banking and his familiarity with the financial world were of exceptional value.

Nicely was, at various times, a lawyer and a banker. His avocations lay in the church and in charitable societies; particularly in the Y.M.C.A., here and abroad. But his main interest and his most important work was in international relations.

James Nicely was born of American parents in Beirut, Lebanon, in 1899. Three years later, his parents brought him to America. He graduated from the University of Chicago in 1920 and, cum laude, from the Harvard Law School in 1923. He served as secretary to Supreme Court Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes and was admitted to the New York Bar in 1925. Two years later, he interrupted his work as practicing attorney with the firm of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner and Reed to accept a position as vice-president of the National Bank of Commerce. Later, he was senior vice-president of the First National City Bank of New York, a post he left to become vice-president and treasurer of the Ford Foundation.

When the Second World War began in Europe, he became Deputy Director General of the British Purchasing Commission. In the desperate days of 1940 and 1941, he worked more than twelve hours a day in the effort to secure war materiel for Great Britain.

As a board member of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace and as a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, his international activities and interests increased until, in the Ford Foundation, he took an enthusiastic part in the Foundation's International Affairs Program and, had he lived longer, he would have gone to Poland with one of the Foundation's teams.

James Nicely was a member of The Century for more than twenty years.

George Norton Northrop

"I wish," writes a Centurion friend, "there were more men like George at The Century." It is probable that men like George were rare anywhere. He was genial and gay, there was none of the austere mien or the autocratic manner that one sometimes associates with a school headmaster.

Perhaps the two most famous schools in New York and Boston were fortunate enough to have George for a head. He was at Brearley for six years; later he was headmaster of Roxbury Latin School in Boston. In an interval between these he served the Chicago Latin School in the same capacity.

George Norton Northrop was born in Platteville, Wisconsin, eighty-four years ago. He studied for two years at the University of Wisconsin and took his B.L. and M.A. degrees at the University of Minnesota in 1902. In both these universities, he served for a brief period as instructor. He did research in English literature at Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1905 and in 1908.

In the First World War, he rose from lieutenant to major in the army. He became assistant chief of staff of the intelligence section of the 88th Division, later the 3d Division, Army of Occupation, Germany.

Officially, he retired in 1947, but for fifteen years thereafter he served as a member of the Overseers Visiting Committee of Harvard University and also lectured on education at Wellesley College. He was a member of the American Historical Association, the Massachusetts Historical Society, and the Colonial Society of Boston.

At The Century, he was noted as a "crack billiard player" and was a familiar figure in the poolroom.

He was a Centurion for more than half his life.

Nathaniel Peffer

Nat Peffer gave one a sense of intellectual sharing that seemed to raise many a lesser man to his level. He had a way of throwing out an idea and listening so eagerly to the expression it provoked that we sometimes came to believe that the idea had been ours, not Nat's. This suggests an uncommon gift, but one that men have been loved for. Yet his mind was not merely receptive and cooperative, it was adventurous, too; often his thinking was highly unorthodox and, for that reason, of value to those he taught.

He came to teaching by an unusual road, journalism. It is true that many teachers have, in their youth, taken a flier at newspaper work, but Nat was in it a long time, long enough to have become addicted or corrupted. But he was immune to the snares and pressures of news writing, and he emerged from his sojourn in the fourth estate with his talent for both lucid and philosophical expression unimpaired. He could write and speak better than most of us; his lectures at Columbia were illuminating and challenging; no one slept while Professor Peffer talked.

Nathaniel Peffer was born in New York City in 1890. In 1911, he graduated from the University of Chicago and soon after became a Far Eastern correspondent for the New York Tribune. During his twenty-five year residence in China he gained an absorbing interest in, and deep sympathy with, the Chinese people. On his occasional visits to the United States, he lectured on the Far East and as a result of some of his lectures at Columbia, he was invited to become associate professor of international relations in the university's department of law and government. From 1943 until his retirement in 1958, he held the post there of professor of international relations.

Peffer broke the superstition that you had to have a Ph.D. to be a teacher. Nevertheless, he sponsored many dissertations and was of great help to students in earning their doctorates. In his lectures and seminars, he reached far beyond his subject and stimulated his students to ask complex and searching questions of all kinds to which he gave no pat answers, but sent the young folk off to the library to dig out the solutions for themselves.

He wrote constantly; his name appeared frequently in both scholarly and popular magazines. His books such as The White Man's Dilemma: Climax of the Age of Imperialism, China: the Collapse of a Civilization, and Must We Fight in Asia? gave westerners and especially Americans not only the facts of a changing China but also a close-up view of the oriental mind.

He had the distinction, during the McCarthy witch hunt, of being attacked as a Communist, a charge that was virtually a guaranty of loyalty.

Nat has been called an "enthusiastic pessimist." His skepticism was engaging because it was both energetic and humorous. His satirical comments on men and events were likely to be so funny that they dissolved any rancor that might have arisen in those who disagreed.

He was deeply devoted to The Century. When his wife died after thirty-five years of happy marriage, he sought out the place that has been a healer to so many men. Unhappily, his last illness kept him from long enjoyment among us. It was an ironic illness, one that prevented him from communicating, a bitter ending for so articulate a man. His dying was a release for him but an enduring sadness for us, his friends.

Frank Willis Pierce

The year 1953, in which Frank Pierce was elected to The Century, was that in which he retired, after thirty years of service, from Standard Oil of New Jersey. Between his proposal as a candidate and his election he had suffered a severe coronary thrombosis and this was followed by a leg amputation. He suggested, therefore, that his name be withdrawn but the Committee would not hear of it. He had many friends and admirers in the Club, and his great regret was that his disability prevented him from being with us more often.

Although educated and, for a time trained, as a mechanical engineer, Frank Pierce allowed human and social complexities to divert his attention from a technical career. His field became, therefore, industrial relations and, for this, he was temperamentally fitted in high degree. He was wise, patient, and friendly; he became quickly, apparently intuitively, aware of individual difficulties.

Frank Willis Pierce was born in Olean, New York, in 1893. He took his mechanical engineer's degree from Cornell in 1916. On graduation, he joined the factory export department of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. He expected an assignment to organize a plant in Brazil and in anticipation of this made an intensive study of Portuguese. The plant did not materialize, however, and he was sent, instead, to Venezuela, the West Indies and Panama. The war recalled him to the Akron headquarters and there he worked on priorities and government orders of rubber.

In 1924, he was invited to become the assistant to the president of the Standard Oil Company, New Jersey. There, his work in industrial relations began, and he carried it on in several Standard Oil subsidiaries. As a result of his increasing interest in this area, he became chairman of the Annuities and Benefits Committee and a trustee of the company's Stock Acquisition Plan. He also worked on the Share-the-Work program that was instituted as a consequence of the Depression.

Roscoe Pound

A scholar and educator in the law rather than a lawyer in the usual accepted sense, Roscoe Pound made contributions to legal thought and scholarship which have helped the fundamental understanding of their profession of countless practicing lawyers. Yet he has done this with a minimum of legal education on his own account and an absence of earned law degrees which would make him ineligible for Bar examinations in most states today. The more than fifteen honorary Doctors of Law degrees he has received from universities here and abroad were in recognition of his achievements as a teacher and as a writer and lecturer on basic principles.

Pound's early learning was at the hands of his parents who prepared him for the University of Nebraska. There he specialized in botany for which he was awarded a Ph.D., and it is said that he was prouder of having a fungus named after him than of all the honors that had been heaped upon him during his educational career.

At the Harvard Law School, which he entered at nineteen, after his graduation from Nebraska, he spent only a year, and, though he was third in his class in grades, he did not even stay long enough for an LL.B.

Twenty years after he left Harvard, he returned to the Law School and was a familiar figure in Cambridge for the rest of his life. With time out for China and California, he kept his office in Langdell Hall and used it even when he was ninety-three.

While dean of the Harvard Law School, he did most of his teaching. His colleagues protested that he was too great a man to undertake the administrative work of a mere dean, but he did it so well that the school's enrollment doubled during his twenty years in that position and its endowment went from a little over seven hundred and fifty thousand to nearly five million dollars. He also reorganized the faculty.

Pound entered the national scene with an address to the American Bar Association at its meeting at St. Paul, Minnesota, in the summer of 1906. His subject was "The Causes of the Popular Dissatisfaction With the Administration of Justice." Thirty years later, Dean John Henry Wigmore wrote that the address "struck the spark that kindled the white flame of high endeavor, now spreading through the entire legal profession and radiating the spirit of resolute progress in the administration of justice."

Roscoe Pound was born in Lincoln, Nebraska, when it was a frontier town in 1870. His father was a judge, and it was he who persuaded the young Roscoe away from botany into the law. At fifteen, he entered the University of Nebraska and took his A.B. there in 1888. In 1889, he entered the Harvard Law School and the following year returned to his native city where he was admitted to the bar of the State of Nebraska and, for about ten years, practised law. In 1903, he began teaching, first as assistant professor then as dean of the university law department. He then served as law professor at Northwestern University and the University of Chicago. Meanwhile he was a commissioner of the Supreme Court of Nebraska and wrote many opinions for that court. In 1910, he came to Harvard as Story Professor of Law and six years later, he was appointed dean of the Law School.

The present dean, Centurion Erwin N. Griswold, said of Roscoe Pound at a memorial service in the Harvard Church in July, 1964:

"As a teacher, he contributed much to the breadth and depth of learning of generations of Harvard law students. As an author, he contributed new ideas, and order and systemization of thought, to many fields of the law. As a jurist, he founded a new school of jurisprudence, which has been of incalculable influence in our time. His fame and his influence were world-wide. . . . To him, almost alone, was due the original awareness of the Harvard Law School in many lands."

He was a Centurion for nearly forty of his ninety-four years.

William Kelly Prentice

Professor Prentice was a third generation member of The Century. His grandfather, Robert Kelly, was one of our founders. In addition to this dynastic distinction, Dr. Prentice has honored The Century's tradition of longevity by remaining with us until his ninety-fourth year.

A scholar in Greek language and literature, he was also a dynamic and impressive teacher, an authority on classical inscriptions in both Greek and Latin, an archeologist, and an author. By the time of his retirement in 1940, he had been a member of the Princeton University faculty for forty-three years.

William Kelly Prentice was born in New York. He was only sixteen when he entered Princeton. He graduated with high honors in 1892 as valedictorian of his class. He became a member of Phi Beta Kappa when its chapter was established at Princeton. He followed a year of teaching at Lawrenceville School with a visit to Germany where he studied at the University of Marburg. He took his doctorate at the University of Halle and returned to America to become an instructor at Princeton, both in 1900. Five years later, he was appointed Ewing Professor of Greek Languages and Literatures. While holding this post, he was Annual Professor in the American School of Classical Studies at Athens and Sather Professor at the University of California.

He was the author of Greek and Latin Inscriptions, Greek and Latin Inscriptions in Syria, The Ancient Greeks, Those Ancient Dramas Called Tragedies, The Gospel of the Kingdom of God.

He was a member of the American Philological Association, the Archeological Institute of America, and the American Historical Association.

In the First World War he served as captain in the Military Intelligence Division of the United States Army.

Edmund Randolph Purves

To his professional colleagues, to fellow Fellows of the American Institute of Architects, and to casual acquaintances, Ned Purves was a "shy" man. He preferred thinking a thing out in quiet solitude—during which his thought was exceptionally clear—and then expressing his views in writing to forensic controversy. Yet he made his opinions prevail, and during his remarkable career as executive director he brought about a wholly new relationship between the Institute and government building agencies.

But to those who knew Ned intimately—members of his family in particular—he showed another, even a sort of swashbuckling side. As a schoolboy, he was his school's number one bad boy, always in trouble. His brothers alternately worshiped and were scared of him. He frightened them with lurid ghost stories and thrilled them with the tales of his experiences in other worlds than theirs.

In the midst of his architectural education, the First World War called to him and he volunteered for the American Field Service of the French Army. Later he joined the A.E.F. in its artillery branch. The contrast between these services and his home life is described by one who knew him best:

"Thrown from the prophylactic ambience of a suburban Philadelphia household into the holocaust of a bloody war he endowed not only himself but his family with a realization that life provides a great deal more variety and reality than is encompassed in conventional, albeit intellectually ambitious, suburban living."

But the war, for Ned, was not a mere fulfilment of duty.

There was nothing perfunctory about his performance. He took an active part in six major engagements and was awarded the Croix de guerre with Silver Star, the Verdun Medal, the Field Service Medal and the Victory Medal with four Battle clasps.

At war's end, he returned to the University of Pennsylvania and finished his architectural course there. After a membership of nearly twenty years in AIA, during which he was engaged in the private practice of architecture, he became the Institute's executive director in 1949 and served in this post until 1960. From 1961 until his death, he was an associate of the firm of Chatelain, Gauger and Nolan in Washington.

Meanwhile, when the Second World War came, he again volunteered for military service. Although over-age, he joined the Seventh Air Force in the Pacific, and, characteristic of American military ways, he was assigned to counter-intelligence, of which he protested he knew nothing. Nevertheless, he became chief of that branch with the rank of major.

He was made an honorary corresponding member of the Royal Institute of British Architects and of the Royal Architects' Institute of Canada. He was awarded the AIA's Kemper Award, the Gold Medal of the Philadelphia Chapter of the AIA, the F. Stuart Fitzpatrick Award, and, in 1920, he was a finalist in the Paris Prize design competition.

"He was always an artist," a Centurion writes. "He combined a sound and exploratory sense of the valid and a keen sense of equity and was not only willing but dedicated to placing this at the disposal of his co-professionals. His fight for the integrity of architectural professionalism was not a job but a vocation."

Karl Reiland

"Can you not see him standing here in this pulpit, rector for twenty-four years, pounding away at new ideas on controversial subjects, defending science against the conservatism of religion, barking at bishops, pausing for a dramatic recitation of Shakespeare, pulling out his handkerchief to mop his brow, tossing his massive head with its raven locks?"

So spoke Karl Reiland's successor, Centurion Edward O. Miller, as rector of Saint George's in Stuyvesant Square in a tribute delivered in the church on a Sunday in October.

There has been no clearer or more nostalgic recall than this of the Episcopalian rector who, more than once, rocked the orthodox Episcopal church to its foundations. If Karl Reiland, in his effort to think and speak the truth, shocked a bishop or two by breaking through the confines of a sectarian creed, he was simultaneously loved by the people of his congregation. And how many a sunny golfing Sunday was forgotten so that one of these devoted parishioners might worship under his direction and, incidentally, learn what this firebrand of a rector might say or do next!

Saint George's is a Century tradition; since our Association was founded, the rector has always been a Centurion. Karl Reiland was often with us; he was a magnet in our house, drawing to him men who were inclined to avoid the cloth. His face and voice invited you; his eloquence instantly rewarded you for accepting the invitation.

Many of us remember the row consequent upon his proposal that a Presbyterian minister conduct a Sunday evening communion service in his church. To William Manning, bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, the idea was "preposterous," and he demanded that the proposed service be canceled. The Presbyterian guest withdrew and the service was abandoned, but the reverberations were felt for a long time. Today, when there is less hostility among the sects, this tempest in the Episcopalian teapot could hardly be taken seriously by clergy or layman, but, in 1930, a bishop could be a martinet within his unit and many approved the discipline he exerted.

Karl Reiland was born in Brooklyn in 1871. He was educated in the public schools of Middletown, Connecticut. He studied at Cheshire Military Academy and at Trinity College, Hartford. He was ordained after attending the Virginia Theological Seminary of Alexandria and the Berkeley Divinity School at Middletown. He became rector of Saint George's in October, 1936, and retired precisely twenty-four years later.

At the burial service which Edward Miller conducted at Winsted, Connecticut, he gave thanks in these words:

"O thou God of the prophets, we thank thee for all the friendliness and humor which flowed from the life of this thy servant into the lives of others.

"We thank thee for his rugged bluntness, his pride in being called a liberal, his uncomplaining suffering when the world rejected his nonconformity."

We of The Century are proud to list this courageous man among our immortals.

Herbert Solow

"We will remember Herb in many ways," writes a colleague who worked with him on Fortune, "Herb on the prowl for injustice and wrongdoings. Herb urging patience. Herb impatient. Herb urging caution. Herb's humor and judgment. However we remember him we will miss him very much."

In the decade of the 1930s when most of us were thrown by the Great Depression out of the context of security, many discontented writers were lured into the Communist orbit. Though he had held what were called "leftist" views himself, Herbert Solow organized an intellectual rebellion against the party's domination of these discontents. As he had learned much of radical politics and had, moreover, a keen analytical mind, he was able to see through the party's exploitation of many innocent and naïve young persons who became "fellow travelers" without quite knowing why and were sorry afterward. In the course of his activities in this cause, he got to know the exile, Leon Trotsky, and attended the hearings in Mexico City in which Trotsky testified about the Moscow trials. For this he was rewarded by the Daily Worker, whose editor called him a Fascist mad dog and enemy of mankind.

His friends tell that Herb Solow was perennially deeply distressed about the state of the world and by the injustices to individuals that crept into free, democratic societies. On these and other subjects he wrote for such periodicals as the Nation, the Partisan Review, and the New Leader, but he also wrote extensively on the questions that interested him most, those of international politics.

Herbert Solow was born in New York in 1903; he was educated at DeWitt Clinton High School and at Columbia from which he graduated in 1924, a member of Phi Beta Kappa. His editorial career began with Menorah Journal and the Encyclopedia of the Social Sciences. He then became assistant to Alvin Johnson, president of The New School for Social Research. In intervals of his free-lance writing, he traveled extensively in Africa and Latin America.

Before he settled into his editor's chair at Fortune, he went through periods of poverty because of his refusal to compromise his intellectual integrity for the sake of financial rewards which were offered him. Then Fortune's policy became Solow's policy. Yet even when he was most hard up, the tastes he was seldom able to gratify were expensive tastes: the best of food and wine and the genial, relaxed company of persons untroubled by material restrictions.

Though he had fought against injustice all his life, destiny in the end dealt him the most unjust blow of all—took him away at sixty-one. Herbert Solow deserved better.

Theodore Cuyler Speers

"Ted Speers," writes a Centurion friend, "was a big human in every way. He had been a hammer-thrower at Princeton and had a hammer-thrower's physique with a large heart to match it. He was one of six sons all of whom were over six feet tall. Mr. James H. Speers, their father, used to say that he had thirty-six feet of sons."

It was said that his clerical collar was the only conventional thing about Ted Speers. He had an audacious, irrepressible Irish wit which startled those who had looked for more restrained behavior from a man of the cloth. This especially delighted such Centurions as met him at the monthly dinners, which he attended whenever he could.

He was an eager champion of interfaith worship, a friend of Roman Catholic priests and Jewish rabbis, and conducted union services at the Central Presbyterian Church in New York in which Methodist and synagogue congregations joined.

He kept up his athletic and outdoor activities as long as he was able, spending his vacations at a camp he built among the mountains of New Hampshire and where he sailed and swam, chopped down trees and climbed the hills.

The destiny of Americans, he said, in 1951, was "to be pilgrims of peace, as our fathers were before us. We are not by nature a patient people, and the diploma of peace is still far beyond our grasp. But we have learned that a victorious war is not all that is necessary."

Theodore Cuyler Speers was born in Bloomfield, New Jersey, sixty-five years ago. He was educated at Hill School and at Princeton, from which he graduated in 1921. Meanwhile, he had served as a combat soldier in the First World War with the 11th Field Artillery in France. He took his bachelor of divinity degree magna cum laude from Union Theological Seminary in 1925. For twenty-three years, he served as pastor of New York's Central Presbyterian Church, after which President Eisenhower appointed him chaplain of the United States Military Academy in 1959. He died at West Point.

William Emery Studdiford

To be adored by "his multitude of female patients" speaks well for an obstetrician who has so often seen them through the "perils of childbirth." "And even by some of their husbands" as the Centurion doctor added when he wrote about William Studdiford, is perhaps a greater tribute, for the corridor-pacing prospective father must have supreme confidence in the man to whom he has entrusted the health and safety of his wife in the dangerous hours.

Outside of his exigent profession, what time he had left was devoted to his Princeton classmates whom he served as secretary of his class.

William Emery Studdiford, Jr., was born in Bay Head, New Jersey, in 1897. His preparatory school was Kent in Connecticut. After Princeton, he studied medicine at the College of Medicine of New York University and earned, in 1920, a Bachelor of Science degree and an M.D. two years later. He interned in both medicine and surgery at Bellevue, from 1922 to 1924, and at Sloane from 1924 to 1928. He was Assistant Attending Obstetrician and Gynecologist at Sloane from 1928 to 1932 and Visiting Gynecologist at Bellevue, from 1932 to 1951. For ten years, he taught at New York University as professor of obstetrics and gynecology and had a similar appointment at the College of Physicians and Surgeons from 1942 to 1945. He was a Fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine and a former president of the New York Obstetrical Society.

He came of a medical family. His father was an obstetrician like himself. With his father he shared some of the traits and habits which had made the elder Studdiford celebrated and beloved. He had a memory that verged on total recall, and this was of great professional value to him. He had a scorn of rigid rules. Once when he was asked for a copy of the rules governing maternity service at Bellevue, he answered, "We take care of people here with intelligence, like playing a bridge hand." From his father, too, he had picked up a habit of humming while he worked—even, sometimes, during operations. William, senior, was also a Centurion.

Fritz Bradley Talbot

A recent exhibition at the New York Public Library showed the work of doctors as men of letters, meaning medical doctors—physicians or surgeons. More rare are doctors who are also painters, but when they exist you will find them in The Century. In Centurion language they are "amateurs," meaning, we have always insisted, "lovers" of the arts, not dabblers in them. Fritz was anything but a "dabbler," and all that prevented him from being a professional painter was the fact that he was a celebrated—some thought a miraculous—pediatrician.

No Centurion who has made a point of looking at the amateur show each autumn can forget Fritz's work. He was invariably represented in the gallery, and, in 1951, he was awarded the Art Committee Medal for the best work in the amateur show for his painting "Oh Lord, May I Continue to Have the Strength to Serve My People." Two of his paintings hang permanently in Boston's Museum of the Fine Arts, two at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and one at the Fogg Museum in Cambridge.

Fritz Bradley Talbot graduated from Harvard College in 1900 and cum laude from Harvard Medical School in 1905. For more than twenty years, he held the post of chief of Children's Medical Service at Massachusetts General Hospital. When, in 1931, he retired, he studied art at the Scott Carbee School and at Harvard.

A Centurion whose sons, less than four years old, were pulled by Doctor Fritz out of serious trouble, wrote his widow: "Both are healthy and successful men of fifty and forty-six. One an artist [perhaps subtly indoctrinated by the doctor], one a lawyer and the father of two sons."

Fritz Talbot had been a Centurion since 1946.

Theodore Van Soelen

Devoted to a true portrayal of life in the cattle country, Theodore Van Soelen sought, in his paintings, to dispel the prevailing notion of the cowboy as the movies had spread it. Cowboys don't, he said, "spend all their time riding madly back and forth shooting into the air." To learn what they really did he shared their life for weeks at a time on ranches in Texas and New Mexico, working with them in all their activities. As the late Centurion Oliver La Farge wrote:

"He has lived with the land, the people, and the animals and set them down as they are. This is what working cowboys look like, this is catching a horse in a rope corral, this is meal time by the chuck wagon, this is the landscape, these are the dwellings."

Though the West has always had the most intense focus of his art, Van Soelen's painting has had national recognition. He was a member of the National Academy. One of his landscapes hangs permanently in the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. He won a bronze medal in the Sesquicentennial International Exhibition at Philadelphia in 1926 and the First Altman Prize four years later.

While he began his career with portraits and landscapes in oil, the major work of his life has been a series of lithographs drawn directly on stone depicting a lost era of American history, the life on the open range and the ranch life of the great Southwest. These were hand-printed on special imported paper. A complete set is owned by the Museum of New Mexico in Santa Fe, the town in which the artist had his home.

Theodore Van Soelen was born in St. Paul, Minnesota, in 1890. Soon after a school education he went to Nevada and took a job driving mules for the construction gang of the Western Pacific railroad. In 1916, on the advice of a physician who had detected respiratory tendencies, he settled in Santa Fe, which remained his home throughout his life.

He was a Centurion for thirty of his seventy-four years.

Forsyth Wickes

"Wixie," as his family and close friends liked to call him, was, by vocation, a combination of lawyer and businessman; but, away from offices, he was a celebrated collector of porcelain and silver about which he knew a great deal, a great host and judge of food and wine, an unofficial diplomat with a reservoir of stories that got him over many a tense moment and, perhaps closer than most affections to his heart, a love of France and all things French. It was his constant effort to warm the relations between France and the United States and in this interest he founded the French Institute and the French Lycée in New York. In France, he won the title of Grand Officer of the Legion of Honor, the highest rank ever accorded an American civilian. In Paris, he was honorary president of the Carnavalet Museum.

Because of his childhood sojourns in France, he acquired a fluency in the language, which determined his appointment by the United States Army in 1917 as liaison officer, an assignment which led to his being attached as major to the French forces under General Maistre. The story is told that Maistre's officers, on seeing the Americans arrive, said to Major Wickes, "Mais ou sont les peaux rouges?", an evidence of the immense influence on Frenchmen of the writings of James Fenimore Cooper.

Forsyth Wickes was born in New York in 1876; he was educated at Saint Mark's School and at Yale, from which he graduated in 1898. In Columbia Law School, he was appointed to a committee of five students who became the first board of editors of the Columbia Law Review. The American Shell Company was ten years old when he became its legal counsel. In 1940, he became a director of the company and was named director emeritus in 1962.

During the Second World War, after years of service with the French societies he had established in New York, he became president of the French-American Relief Society.

In addition to his work as a collector, he was also an art scholar. He lectured on eighteenth-century art at the Metropolitan Museum in New York, where he was a fellow-in-perpetuity.

Wickes lived in Newport, Rhode Island, but he also owned a chateau in Normandy where he spent several months each summer.

Walter Francis Willcox

One evening at The Century, a Cornell alumnus said to one of his former teachers:

"Doctor Willcox, I suppose you are returning to Ithaca tomorrow."

"No," Walter Willcox replied, "I am going to Delhi."

Thinking he meant Delhi, New York, his friend said,

"They don't pronounce it Delhi up in New York State, they call it 'Delhigh.' "

"But," said Willcox, "I mean New Delhi, India, where I am going to attend an international congress, the annual meetings of which I have attended in various countries of the world for many years; in fact, I served as its president for some time."

There was nothing remarkable in the fact that Dr. Willcox should go to New Delhi for a series of long and arduous meetings. But that he should do so in his ninety-seventh year seemed to his Centurion friend surprising.

But this was nothing to the astonishment of all of us when, three years later, in his hundred-and-first year, having survived New Delhi and several other long journeys with apparent benefit to his health, he turned up at a monthly meeting.

"Gentlemen," he said when President Kieffer asked him to speak to us, "in view of my advanced years, this occasion is a very great one for me. In fact, it may well be the last great occasion of my life. Possibly you would like to hear about the first important historical event that I remember; it was the assassination of Abraham Lincoln."

A few months before his death at one hundred and three, he could be seen almost daily walking a mile across the hilly Cornell campus. He would tell his friends, "I never had a pain or an ache in my life."

Longevity by itself is, of course, no great reason for admiration. It is a gift the Lord occasionally gives in spite of Biblical words about dust and ashes. But, as is the case with most elder Centurions, Dr. Willcox had many other claims to distinction. For two generations, forty years, he taught economics at Cornell, began another career as an expert statistician for the Census Department after his retirement.

Walter Francis Willcox was born in Reading, Massachusetts, in 1861. He took his A.B. from Amherst College in 1884, his M.A. in 1888 and his LL.B. in 1906. He came to Cornell in 1891 as an instructor of logic and became professor of economics in 1901. Meanwhile he had served as a statistical expert for the War Department at the end of the Spanish-American War. He took the census of Cuba and Puerto Rico. He was also chief statistician of the Twelfth United States Census in 1900.

True retirement which, from Cornell, occurred, theoretically, in 1931 was impossible for a man with the energy and ideas of Walter Willcox. One of his favorite crusades was his campaign to attain a fairer balance in congressional districting. He also hoped for the reduction of the number of congressmen to 300. When, in 1960, he testified on reapportionment before a House judiciary subcommittee, he delivered this testimony standing; though he was then ninety-eight and though it lasted an hour, he refused a chair when it was offered him.

In addition to being the oldest member of The Century, Willcox was also its senior member, having been elected in 1905.

Paul Austin Wolfe

His presence on the happiest and the saddest days of many Centurions has endeared Paul to us all. For he has blessed our marriages and comforted us for our losses. The echo of the words he said over those who have left us will comfort us in this time for the loss of him.

But outside his well-loved church he did much for The Century. He was our second vice-president for three years, and, in spite of the heavy demands on his time, he gave us not only the performance of his office but his genial and heartening company as well. He conducted several of our monthly meetings and those of our Board of Management with dignity and humor, but he was also a familiar figure at our Round and Long Tables.

"He loved life," writes a Centurion friend, "and particularly life at The Century where he joined in the festivities with as much pleasure and zest as any of the rest of us yet he never once forgot that he was a minister of the Church." Indeed, he always wore his clerical collar though his church does not require it; he saw no reason to conceal the faith that was a part of him, and it never set him above or apart from us in fellowship.

Paul Austin Wolfe was born in Avalon, Missouri, sixty-six years ago. He took his B.A. at Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, in 1918. Three years later, Yale Divinity School gave him a degree of Bachelor of Divinity and, in 1933, Northwestern University gave him his doctorate. He has had honorary degrees from Columbia, Amherst, Washington and Jefferson, and several other colleges and universities.

After he was ordained, he served at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church as assistant and as minister in Keene Valley, New York, and Evanston, Illinois. From 1928 to 1932, he was chaplain of the Taft School at Watertown, Connecticut. He became minister of the Brick Church in 1938. He was elected Presbytery moderator in 1952 and served for two years in that capacity.

Paul was greatly interested in education and held some definite and sometimes controversial views on schools. Public schools, he thought, were likely to become "victims of highly organized pressure groups," and he was an advocate of private school education.

Some of Paul's friends felt that his strenuous exertions on behalf of his church contributed to the exhaustion which was a prelude to his too early death. But when he was among us, he always seemed so animated and often gay, that most of us were surprised when he left us.

He will be long and affectionately remembered and we are grateful for every day of the twenty-three years that he was one of us.

Lucien Wulsin

He was a businessman but very far from what snobbish creative folk call a "mere businessman." His business was pianos, and he knew concert pianists all over the world and had a great fund of stories about these sometimes idiosyncratic Olympians. Lucien was a warm, friendly, but also, exciting person with so contagious a zest that a few minutes in his company gave a new impulse to the most downhearted friend. He was a kind of "giant in the earth"; earthy, vital, and basic. He loved tough challenges, but he was also at home with the gentle amenities: good food, good wine, good talk, and good company. Incidentally, he was an expert amateur chef, and he entertained a host of friends while he cooked for them.

Unhappily, Lucien Wulsin's membership in The Century was so brief that those of us who did not know him before were unable to share the companionship with those who did. But he lived and worked in his native Cincinnati and spent his summer vacations in Canada, where he was a sort of "lord of the manor" in the town of Desbarats, Ontario. It is said that the whole community there revolved about him, for he was loved and revered by all who knew him. Because of this remoteness from New York, he had little opportunity to enjoy the Club that would have enjoyed him so much.

Lucien Wulsin was born in Cincinnati in 1889 and educated at St. George's School in Newport and at Harvard, from which he graduated in 1910. His first job was as electrical engineer with Stone and Webster of Boston. In 1912, he joined the Baldwin Piano Company in Cincinnati, and, after being secretary and treasurer, he became president in 1924. In the First World War, he was with the Engineer Corps, United States Army.

He was trustee and secretary of the Cincinnati Institute of Fine Arts, former president of the Historical and Philosophical Society of Ohio, and a former Harvard Overseer.

NOTE

The most important part of the Memorials is that taken from the personal information which can be provided only by close friends of the departed Centurions. The Historian regrets that, by the time this Year-Book went to press, he had been unable to secure information of that kind concerning nine of the Centurions on the 1964 roll. Their Memorials will be included in the 1966 book.—R.B.
